PREFATORY LETTER.

DEAR MR VICE-CHANCELLOR,

The following pages are intended to fulfil the promise made in my letter, published by your predecessor in the University Reporter of 26 May 1885, of submitting to the University a detailed account of my recent tour in India, in accordance with the conditions of Grace 2 of the Senate of 19 June 1884. I then expressed a hope that the present publication might be ready early in last Michaelmas term; but circumstances rendered that impossible, and even now it is not as full as I could have wished. It seemed better however to make no further delay. The chief matters postponed are the descriptions of several interesting and little-known MSS. and the publication of several inscriptions.

In the descriptions of the new literature that I have brought to light, I fear my brief notices will seem very partial and meagre, if compared, for instance, with the admirable accounts and extracts given in the recent reports of Professors Peterson and Rāmakrishna Bhāṇḍārkar. Some allowance will doubtless be made for the difference of situation between scholars working with the ever-helpful pandit always at hand in the glorious λαμπρὸς αἰθῆρ of India, and the single-handed efforts of one whose hours of daylight (such as it is in a London winter) are chiefly consumed by official work. I have thus had to forego describing in detail the fine representative collection of Sanskrit and Prakrit literature purchased by me at Bombay from Pandit Bhagvān Dās, and to confine myself to reproducing his rough list without classifying the MSS., as I have done in the case of my own collection. Still less have I been able to give notes on the more remarkable works, as I have attempted in that case. An adequate description, indeed, would be the work of years rather than of months. My want of daylight leisure has also prevented me publishing all my inscriptions; but I hope to be able to deal with them before very long.

My acknowledgments of help received during the journey itself will be found at the end of Part I. In reading these, I trust my native friends will recognise their own names. At the risk of occasionally seeming pedantic, I have transliterated their names like other Indian words, without reference to local pronunciation¹.

In the preparation of the present work, I have to thank several friends, especially Professor William Wright, for many valuable hints and for kind and prompt help in revising the proofs. Professor J. G. Bühler of Vienna has likewise aided in the revision of my inscriptions. Professor Cowell, Dr Daniel Wright, Professors Weber, Jacobi, and Adams have also favoured me with ready answers to various special questions that I have ventured to address to them.

I feel it also my sad duty to refer here to not fewer than three of those who aided in my work in various ways, and have been removed by death since I commenced it.

The first is the late Raṇa-uddīpa Siṃha (Runoodeep Sing), Mahārāja (Prime Minister) of Nepal, who was slain during the disturbances in Kathmandu in November last. Whoever may be the new rulers, I trust they will be no less ready than the late Premier to afford a courteous reception to scholars.

Next I must mention Mr James Fergusson, incomparably the soundest and most accomplished critic of our day in his particular branch of art, who took a kindly interest in the journey now recorded, both before and after it was undertaken.

Perhaps one of the last opinions he delivered on his favourite subject of Indian art was in reference to the photograph of the temple at Oodeypore now published¹.

Lastly I have to mourn the heavy loss, still fresh in the mind of every Cambridge reader, of one of the most trusty, most energetic, and most appreciative friends and supporters of the present work, and, let me add, of the worker also. Under the auspices of Henry Bradshaw, the greatest librarian of our time, it was my privilege to commence my study of manuscripts. I shall never forget the sympathy, and even enthusiasm with which he used to follow, in the minutest palæographical and chronological details, my endeavours to arrange the great Nepal collection of our Library, nor my debt to him for many a hint and practical direction in the work of re-arranging many masses of confused leaves and in describing and registering the re-arrangement. I well remember a phrase of his, used not without a touch of irony significant for us librarians: "My favourite occupation is putting rubbish in order." Though no professed Orientalist, he had something to teach specialists in all branches. He had, as many others can testify, a very strong sense of the value of our Oriental collections, and not the least of that sent by Dr Wright from Nepal. My proposal to visit that country found in him from the first one of its most friendly and warmest supporters. I have seldom received more real encouragement than from the expression of the genial and firm support that he was pleased to give to my application to the Worts Fund on the occasion of its discussion in the Arts School on 17 June 1884.

Conscious as I am of the shortcomings of the present work, I have no keener regret in connexion with it than that it cannot be submitted to him at all events in its complete form, though some of the first part was read in manuscript by him and has been in a few places modified according to his suggestions. Yet it is some satisfaction to know his opinion of my efforts, and of their possible results and development, whether by myself or others: and thus I feel that I cannot now do better than conclude by quoting the final sentences of the last letter of any consequence that he wrote to me,—à propos of the journey now described: “Your work is a real beginning and must lead to more good work. I only hope that you may be allowed to have a hand in it.”

I remain,

dear Mr Vice-Chancellor,

Yours faithfully,

CECIL BENDALL.

PART I.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL AND GENERAL REPORT.

My tour in Northern India commenced at Bombay on Oct. 22nd, 1884.

After landing I lost little time in making the acquaintance of Pandit Dr¹ Bhagvānlāl Indrajī, whose researches in Indian antiquities, chiefly published in the Indian Antiquary, are well known both in India and Europe. The Pandit resides near the Valkesvar shrine—a celebrated and most picturesque place of Hindu pilgrimage, situated in strange juxtaposition to the fashionable European quarter of the Malabar Hill. In his house is a large and interesting collection of coins, copperplate grants and other antiquities. Amongst other objects I may note in particular, a double-headed figure covered with inscriptions in the rare and interesting Ariano-Pali character. It is much to be desired that the Pandit or some other antiquary should publish some account of this monument.

Having made no extensive study of Indian numismatics, I offer no opinion as to the exact value of the Pandit's collection of coins, which is however strongly representative of the Gupta period; but as the Pandit has probably made more extended scientific travels than any other native of India, and these always with an antiquarian object, it doubtless represents a great diversity of place as well as time. I have little doubt that Dr Bhagvānlāl would readily respond to requests from institutions like the University or the British Museum for copies or impressions, from which possibly exchanges of duplicates could be arranged.

My more particular purpose in seeking the acquaintance of this great scholar was to gain some advice as to my journey to Nepal. The Pandit himself spent four months in that country in the year 1880, and published some valuable and interesting inscriptions, copied by him there, in the Indian Antiquary (Vol. IX. pp. 160 seq., sequel in Vol. XIV. pp. 411 seq.). Following a suggestion of my friend Professor J. G. Bühler of Vienna, who had kindly written to Dr Bhagvānlāl to interest him in my journey to Nepal, I sought to induce him to accompany me thither; but after some hesitation my proposal was declined on the ground of numerous literary engagements. I may state here, however, that on my return to Bombay the Pandit expressed regret that he had not gone with me, and further added that, should I visit Nepal again, he would accompany me both to Kathmandu and to some other parts of the country, which I shall mention later on.

I cannot however speak in too warm terms of the kind and friendly way in which this eminent scholar placed at my disposal the very exceptional experience he had gained, as the only scientific traveller who had visited this secluded country unencumbered by all the restrictions placed there on Europeans. I not only profited by numerous conversations with him during my hurried stay in Bombay, but also received after my departure several letters containing valuable hints and information as to the whereabouts of objects whose existence the Pandit had ascertained without being able to publish a description of them.

In Dr Bhagvānlāl's collection are also several early MSS. from Nepal, from which I obtained some fresh dates supplementing the chronological table of the kings of Nepal occurring at pp. xii. sqq. of my Catalogue. These are given in Appendix III. below.

On leaving Bombay for the interior I made a short detour to the great cave of Kārli, certainly among the most solemn and impressive of all the temples of the world, deeply interesting as a monument alike of the stately magnificence of ancient Buddhism, and of constructive religious art, enhanced by the venerable records with which its stones are covered. After a preliminary visit to Benares I proceeded by the Tirhut State Railway to Motihāri. I passed the Nepalese frontier near Phulwaria, not without considerable annoyance from the officials, and arrived in Kathmandu¹ on November 9th.

Here I occupied the travellers' bungalow belonging to the Government of India, and during each day was entertained by the Resident, Mr C. Girdlestone, whose kind cooperation in forwarding several of the objects of my visit I desire cordially to acknowledge. The first of the few days I was enabled to spend in Nepal had to be given up to inactivity, as the Resident considered it unadvisable to visit the city, especially for the purposes of archæological search, without acquainting the Durbar with the objects of my mission. I utilized the time, however, to some extent in preliminary work for my chief object, the acquisition of MSS., by several conversations with the Residency Pandit Indrānand, the son of the late Pandit Guṇānand, one of the collaborateurs in the History of Nepal compiled by Dr Daniel Wright, and published by the University. Such success as I had in my main object was almost entirely due to the exertions of this Pandit, to whom I am also much indebted for very attentive and courteous guidance in visiting several of the more distant localities of archæological interest. I also profited much by the cordially rendered assistance of the Residency Mīr Munshi, Durgācaraṇa Miṣra. The Pandit had already gained particulars as to a list of desiderata which I had forwarded to the Resident by post: he had also obtained one MS. on approval, which I ultimately purchased. See Classified List of MSS. in Part II., § XI. No. 2.

On the 12th November I made a beginning of practical archæological work by visiting some of the places in or near the town of Kathmandu in which inscriptions had been found by Pandit Bhagvānlāl in 1880.

The very first and nearest of these seemed to illustrate forcibly how desirable it is that opportunities should be taken to reproduce these documents while they still exist.

This was the short inscription of Aṃṣuvarman [Indian Antiq. Vol. IX. (for August, 1880), No. 8], which is described as at Satdhārā near the Rāṇipokhra tank. The whole masonry of the place round the spring seems quite recently to have been demolished, and heaps of brick rubbish are lying about in all directions, the whole spot as far as the tank being now included in the parade-ground. I found no trace of the inscription, so that it would seem that the Pandit was only just in time to preserve a record of it.

I next visited Lagan-ṭol, within the town, and there saw the originals of Nos. 3 and 4 of Pandit Bhagvānlāl's series, and can testify to the great accuracy of the published reproductions of these, as I examined the dates in particular with considerable care. Near the site of No. 4, at the opposite side of the temple of Jaisi, is a specimen of a class of inscription of which I found several instances in Nepal, viz., a stone at the end of a conduit in which was formerly a spout, inscribed with the date and name of donor. The present inscription is given in full in Appendix I. with facsimile. It is dated [Çrīharsha-] Saṃvat 151 (A.D. 657), and records the donation of the conduit with certain measures of land by a matron named Bhojamati to the temple-committee of Lanjagval for their perpetual enjoyment thereof.

On November 14th I visited the famous hill of Svayambhūnāth, of which a description, together with early myths concerning it, is to be found in Dr D. Wright's work on Nepal, pp. 23, 79 sqq. I give a view, drawn from an imperfect negative of my own, of part of the great central mound, with a curious collection of smaller stūpas of slate and stone with which the courtyard is crowded. I ascertained from some of the priests of the shrine that several Sanskrit manuscripts, including a palmleaf 'Ashtasahasrikā,' a paper Lalitavistara and others, were preserved here. They declined, however, to exhibit them, the custom being to produce them only on special religious occasions for the adoration of the faithful. How intelligent would be the use of such books may be inferred from the circumstance that even the chief priest to whom I addressed some simple Sanskrit phrases, did not so much as attempt to answer me in the classical language—a point of honour with every decent pandit in the plains of India.

During my pilgrimage to the shrine I found remains of an early inscription on a fallen and broken lot or votive pillar, now lying along the side of a well in the courtyard. It may be seen in the illustration just at the feet of the group of garlanded worshippers and others. The inscription is at present a mere fragment, as the lower part is broken, and the upper part is worn and has been partly recovered with a thinly scratched (and to me illegible) modern inscription. The character, however, of what remains is of decided Gupta type, quite distinct from the Aspiration group of the sixth cent. A.D. as may be seen at once from the archaic forms of ā, ṛ and other letters, which resemble typical inscriptions of the fourth and fifth centuries; so that we may fairly infer that the shrine has an antiquity of some 1400 or 1500 years—a conclusion which is interesting when taken in connection with the history of the spot, namely the remote relations of the Sravastī-Patala, as to which it may suffice here to refer to the evidence in my Catalogue of the Buddhist Sanskrit MSS. in the University Library, p. 7. It is the present time I have not succeeded in obtaining from the priests any even partly legible copy of the inscription. I also published) at the base of the great flight of steps leading up the hill, shewing a figure of Buddha between two lions of archaic character. The figures and numerous small stūpas here are surrounded by numbers of small tablets deposited by Tibetan pilgrims. Most of them bear the familiar 'om maṇi padme hūm' in the characteristic raised (not incised) letters. A living representative of these pilgrims was standing in the foreground.

In the latter part of the same day I was favoured with an interview with His Excellency the Mahārāja or prime minister of Nepal, Rāṇa-uddīpa Siṃha. On the same occasion I had the pleasure of meeting General Khadga Shamsher Siṃha, who by his friendly courtesy and excellent knowledge of English was of great assistance to me on this and several other occasions. There was also present the Durbar pandit, Vācaspati, who conversed in clear and excellent Sanskrit, in which also the Mahārāja (who is evidently much interested in the classical language) occasionally joined.

I then explained my objects in visiting Nepal, briefly referring to the work recently done by myself and by others on the literature and antiquities of the country. Permission was granted to see the Durbar library and also to copy inscriptions and to photograph buildings. I also made some suggestions as to the desirability of viewing some very ancient manuscripts and other documents mentioned to me by Dr Bhagvānlāl Indrajī as in the possession of Buddhist and other religious establishments, and a promise was made that efforts should be directed towards procuring access to these, by having them brought to the Durbar or otherwise. Judging by the great trouble that was taken to show me the Mahārāja's own MSS., it may fairly be supposed that, had my stay in the country not been curtailed as it was, some of the hopes thus raised might have been realised. On the following day I visited Bodhnāth (described in Wright's History p. 22, with a picture¹, and the legend of its foundation at p. 100). The shrine seems almost entirely kept up by Bhotiyas and Tibetans. The adjacent village abounds in small Tibetan inscriptions, mostly of very modern appearance. I took a rough copy of a single specimen of these.

On the 16th November I made my first visit to the interesting old town of Pātan, formerly called Lalitapur or Lalitapattan, only $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Kathmandu, but long the seat of a separate monarchy¹, and at present the chief seat of the national Buddhism. A photograph is published by Hoffman of Calcutta, which gives some idea of the singularly diversified and picturesque effect of the group of temples in the great square of the old Durbar there. They appear to be mostly of the xvth and xvith centuries: and from inscriptions written in Newari, and therefore not reproduced here, I gained some particulars as to the genealogies and dates of the kings of this period, which I have incorporated in the revised table of kings supplementary to that published in the introduction to my Catalogue. See Appendix III. In a street leading through a small drill-ground, eastwards from the south-east corner of this square, I discovered two inscriptions of the viith century, adjacent to wells called respectively Gairī-dhārā and Sun-dhūrā.

The first is dated [Śrīharsha-] Saṃvat 82 (A.D. 688) and records the provision made by a monarch for the due worship of a divinity as well as for the repair and cleansing of the shrine. The residue (pariṣeṣa), if any, of the grant was to be used for the feeding of 'the Pācupatas and Brahmins.' The executive officer of the grant is a Yuvarāj whose name seems to be Skanda-deva. The stone is much weather-worn at the top, but many of the remains of incisions, though nearly flattened down, are fairly legible. The experience of a stone like this showed the importance of supplementing any system of estampage or other copy from contact, by photography. At the same time I have unfortunately to add that the risks of the latter process were exemplified by the fracture of the glass of my negative, which I therefore do not publish, but give in Appendix I. an autotype reproduction of part of the back of my paper copy, so that the letters appear raised instead of incised as they are in fact.

The Sundhārā inscription is dated [Çriharsha-] Saṃvat 34 (A.D. 640) and records a grant, from a king whose name is now lost, but doubtless Aṃṇuvarman, of land near the village of Māṭin, the assessment (*piṇḍaka*¹) of which is to be handed over to the Pāñcālīkas, elsewhere endowed both by Aṃṇuvarman and his successor Jishṇugupta (Bhagvānlāl, Inscr. 7 and 10), as a permanent endowment for the repair of a building which the king had recently restored after considerable dilapidations had occurred. As to who the Pāñcālīkas were, we have no certain information. Dr Bhagvānlāl in his note (26) on his 7th inscription tells us that "the word Pāñcālīka seems to be a technical expression corresponding to the southern Pāñcakulika and the modern 'Panch'": with which we are to compare the modern temple-committees called gutṭhī. In the History of Nepal as translated by Dr D. Wright, the term does not seem to occur, but at p. 163 we find that (many centuries after this) a town Panāvati (now Panautī) was founded 'near the Prayāga-tīrtha of Nepal, celebrated in the Shastras, on the site where the Pancāla-des formerly stood'; while on p. 133 we are told that Aṃṇuvarman, who was reigning at the date of this inscription, "went to Prayāga-tīrtha and persuaded [the deity] Prayāga Bhairava to accompany him to Nepal." May we conjecture (until further evidence is forthcoming) from these confused and mythical traditions that the Pāñcālīkas were a band of settlers, whom Aṃṇuvarman introduced from the Kanauj and Prayāg (Allahabad) districts and whom he sought to propitiate by grants of territory and general endowment?

Near the inscription, on the opposite side of the open square in which it stands, is a small group of images in high relief with a votive inscription in verse recording that in [Nepal] Saṃvat 203, Vāṇadeva, son of a king (bhūnātha) Yaçodeva, erected this image in honour of the Sun-god, which had been planned by his mother. Two points of interest attach to this group, of which I accordingly made a photograph, now reproduced. (1) In view of the comparative rarity of sun-worship at the present day, it is important to get a dated figure of the deity with his attendants. In illustration of this I may mention that none of the pandits to whom I showed the photograph recognised the figure without the inscription, excepting only Dr Bhagvānlāl, who tells me that he means to publish some notes, which will surely be most acceptable, on sun-cult in India. (2) Yaçodeva being unknown as a king of Nepal proper, it is reasonable to suppose that he was a neighbouring petty rāja; as such he may have been the father of the first of the new line who about this time (Wright p 160, and Bhagvānlāl, Ind. Ant. Dec. 1884) took possession of the Nepalese throne. It is true that the first of this line is called Vāma-(Bāma-)deva, not Vānadeva; but such errors of a letter where the sound is similar are not uncommon in these vaṃṣāvalīs: thus Ānanda, known to us from the MS. colophons, is always called Nanda in the chronicles; so too his successor is variously called Mitra and Amṛita. I suppose, then, Vānadeva to have been at this time (A.D. 1083) intriguing (cf. Wright, l.c.) as yuvārāj with the people of Patan and to have enjoyed his two years of sovereignty about three or four years later. See Appendix III.

About 20 yards up a lane leading southwards from the same square is a conduit stone with a line or two of chipped and obliterated letters of archaic type.

The next day was occupied by second visits to the inscriptions near the Jaisi temple in Kathmandu and to Svayambhūnāth hill to further the investigations summarized above.

Nov. 18, 19. After a day spent chiefly in work connected with MSS., I walked to the charmingly situated shrine of Gokarṇa, and attempted to reach from thence the hill of Chāngunārāyaṇa, but being misdirected, had to postpone the visit to another opportunity, which, I regret to state, did not occur. I have written to Nepal, however, for a copy of the missing parts of Pandit Bhagvānlāl's reproduction of the important inscription there, and venture to hope that after the general progress made in the country since the Pandit's attempt seven years ago¹, no difficulties will now be experienced in getting the whole copied.

On Nov. 20 I visited Kīrtipur, but failed to find any early inscriptions; but on my return thence through the southern part of Kathmandu I discovered a conduit inscription in a place called Varam-tol. It is dated [Nepal] Samvat 259 (A.D. 1139), by a curious coincidence the same reign and date as Add. MS. 1643, second colophon, in our University Library. The characters have a special interest as being, I think, hitherto unnoticed in inscriptions and bearing a very distinct analogy to the hooked-top written character of the period, peculiar to Nepal, as to which I may be permitted to refer to my remarks in the Palæographical Introduction to my Catalogue of MSS. from Nepal. See Appendix I.

The language of the inscription is somewhat faulty in its Sanskrit and relates to the construction of the conduit.

Nov. 21. The archæological work of the next day was chiefly in Kathmandu.

Here I took a photographic view now produced in auto-type of a portion of the great Durbar-square, often photographed from different points. I selected the Kumārī-deval at its S.W. corner as a typical Nepalese temple, showing in the background a building somewhat characteristic in style, which Dr D. Wright explains to me to be an annexe to the Durbar, used on ceremonial occasions.

Further I selected a stūpa in a court behind the houses in a narrow but busy street leading northwards from the square and called Eṭṭa-tol, as an example of this kind of erection still found even in the middle of the larger towns, and usually standing, as this one does, in large open squares which must be of great sanitary advantage in a place where to western notions every law of health seems reversed².

² Dr Daniel Wright's remarks (History of Nepal, p. 12) are not at all too severe from a European doctor's point of view. I can only say that the con-

In the vicinity I found an inscription dated [Nepal] Samvat 818 (A.D. 1698), reign of [Bhā]skaramalla (see Revised Table, Appendix III).

Nov. 22. On this day a second visit to Patan yielded some of the results anticipated in the account of the place given above, and I also took occasion to photograph the Kvaccha-deval which stands outside the town to the N.E. and near the river. From my photograph a lithographic drawing has been made, which is now published. My visit to this temple was due to a drawing (No. 21) in a series prepared some 50 years ago for Mr Brian Hodgson, at once the greatest and least thanked of all our Indian Residents, when in charge at Kathmandu.

Mr Hodgson kindly lent me the series for my journey and the present report: and has directed that it is to be hereafter deposited in the India Office Library. I observe that in the drawing in question a smaller, two-storied, temple is added to the right hand of the large one. This is stated in a foot-note to be "Sacred to Sarasvati, built by Tejnām 567, Newar era"; but there is no trace of this building now. It would be interesting to learn how it disappeared; it was certainly not pulled down to gain room, as the temple stands quite beyond the town. It occurs to me as possible that Mr Hodgson's native draughtsman, a weak point with whom was trying to get too much into a picture, inserted a temple from some other place to make a pleasing composition. If I could make a longer visit to Nepal, I should certainly try to clear up this point, as 567 (A.D. 1447) is somewhat early for such a building as that shown in the drawing.

Near the N.W. corner of the town stands the temple of dition of an ordinary eastern town, say Cairo or Benares, gives one no idea at all of Kathmandu. The nearest thing I found in India were some terrible lanes in the native capital (in most respects so 'advanced') of Jeypore. But as the people seem stronger and far more active than most of the inhabitants of India, sanitary criticism is a little disarmed. It would be certainly a pity, and moreover useless, as Dr Wright points out, to destroy the old buildings, often so charmingly picturesque, simply to apply laws made for a less hardy race. I am bound however to add, that since I left Kathmandu, and indeed since I wrote the above lines, a very severe outbreak of cholera has occurred in the town.

Kumbheçvara (Çiva), which I have selected for illustration as a fine and hitherto unnoticed specimen of Nepalese architecture. In the extensive and picturesque courtyard of this temple are several inscriptions. The earliest is clearly and evenly cut on a slab of slate, so smooth as to allow of my making a heel-ball copy. The inscription is dated in Nep. Samv. 512 (A.D. 1392), and records the foundation of the temple by one Jayabhīma to promote the recovery of his wife from a fever; Çiva however took her to his heaven; but the husband kept his word, and with the consent of his second wife Abhayalakshmi and his sons, built a lofty temple (prāsāda) to Çiva Kumbheçvara with torans (trabeate arches), in place of the mere dwelling-house (āvāsa) which had housed the god before. He likewise cleared the ground and surrounded it by walls, subsequently adding a square-built treasury (?) (chāturmukhakoça), which, as well as the temple, he enriched with precious ornaments. I had not time to work out fully the archaeology of this fine temple, but I noted on the main building a long inscription dated 921 (A.D. 1801), apparently referring to a restoration. See the autotype reproduction of my negative.

On the outskirts of the town are the Ipi-tūda chaitya-mound and the Ipi-vihāra. The former is of simple form and preserves the wooden poles which appear in Mr Hodgson's sketch of the place¹. To the latter, which seemed a typical and ancient vihāra, I was not allowed entrance beyond the door. In all matters of this kind I always found the adherents of Buddhism—once the most liberal of religions—more superstitious than the lowest of the Hindus and as intractable as the most bigoted of the Jains of India.

Close to the above-named temple is a building, obviously a Buddhist vihāra, to which, as it has passed into the hands of Hindus, being now a "Bhagvan-deval," I gained access, and photographed the quaint courtyard, in which may be still seen all round the latticed apartments where the reading of the law and other religious exercises were carried on. See the autotype reproduction.

On Nov. 23—24 I made a two days' visit to Bhātgaon, staying there in a house kindly placed at my disposal by H. E. the Mahārāja.

To the right of the temple of Bhairava, in one corner of the great square, I found an inscription of Yakshamalla dated N.S. 560 (A.D. 1440), of which I took a rough squeeze.

Near the celebrated brass gate of the palace I noticed an inscription of Ranajitamalla, dated N.S. 874 (A.D. 1754), the latest date of any document that I have observed previous to the Gorkha conquest.

In this town I obtained direct access to a collection of MSS., several of which were in Bengali or in Maithili character and dated in the peculiar local Lakshmana Sena Samvat (A.D. 1106). Amongst others I noted a copy of a rare grammatical commentary, the Bhāshāvṛtti by Purushottama, and portions of a work called Nyāyaśāstraśmṛiti written at Kathmandu in the viith century of Nepal: a Newari commentary was added to the text and the work seemed similar to the 'Mānava-nyāya-śāstra' of Nārada, subsequently purchased by me at Kathmandu. In Dhruva-tol I found a small and fragmentary inscribed slab in the centre of a raised platform now chiefly used for threshing.

Further up the winding lane which forms the chief street of the town, in a place called Golmādhī-tol, I found another inscription in more perfect condition. This I have already published in the Indian Antiquary for 1885. As there stated, the inscription is to be compared with others of the same two rulers in the series already referred to (see the Indian Antiquary, Vol. IX, pp. 169 foll.) edited by Drs Bhagvānlāl and Bühler, which give the dates of Samvat 34 and 39, referred to the era of Çrihara and thus corresponding to A.D. 640—46. Independently of Nepalese evidence, we know from Hiuen Tsiang that Amçvarman flourished in the first half of the viith century A.D.; so that the date of the present inscription, 318, accords perfectly with Al-Berūnī's Gupta-Vallabhi era of A.D. 319¹, as we thus get for the inscription the date of A.D. 637, which admirably accords with what we know already of the two rulers just named. Compare now the continuation of the above-cited paper in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XIII. p. 422, etc. I of course photographed this stone, and the reproduction from my negative is given with my transcript in Appendix I.

The other inscription, as far as it remains, is a duplicate of the same proclamation addressed to the same villagers, together with the inhabitants of several other districts, the boundaries of which are accurately given both by the cardinal points and by land measurements. A reproduction of a portion only of my squeeze of this inscription is given in Appendix I., and this merely on account of the dissimilarity of the style of character from the other. Though of course contemporaneous, the writing is freer and more sloping, and, so to say, cursive in effect.

Later on I took note of two more inscriptions: the first near the temple of Nārāyaṇa in Khaumār-tol, the second in a math or quasi-collegiate establishment, behind No. 12 Valacche-tol. I regret that the crowd of idle followers who pursued me into the quiet little courtyard where this inscription, with some others of later date, was fixed, so disturbed the tenants of the math that, on returning to take a copy, I found the door closed against me. I generally found, I may observe, that, in Nepal, where Tibetans and Chinamen attract no notice, the mere dress of a European is sufficient to draw a train of 30 or 40 idlers, which would soon be doubled if an object like a photographic camera were produced.

It may be noted in illustration of the force of Hindu customs in Nepal just as in the plains, that I observed during my walk through the town a picturesque group in a courtyard listening to a reading of the Bhāgavata-purāṇa from the lips of a demonstrative guru, who spoke the ślokas with much gesticulation and a peculiar unctuousness in the delivery of words like Paramēṣ- vara, that quite gave the effect of "the blessed word Mesopotamia." I fear there were not a dozen people in the town who could understand the Sanskrit of this work any more than the women and children who piously formed part of the congregation, and it is rather characteristic of a good deal of such religion, that the chance passer-by, who might have understood, was not allowed beyond the threshold.

My second day at Bhātgaon was partly occupied in photographing inscriptions and other objects. I also took a rough squeeze of the inscription of Yakshamalla noted above.

On this day I made some further efforts in my search for MSS., and my success was greater than I expected, but my negotiations were, I fear, interfered with by the officiousness of the Nepalese mukhya, or guard in attendance on me. As a general rule I had nothing to complain of in the demeanour of these men; on the contrary, on several occasions, so far from acting as spies or standing in the way of my investigations, they were of great use in overcoming the stupid prejudices against strangers manifested especially by the Buddhists of this country.

Nov. 26. After a day spent in work at MSS., with only short excursions, I made a third visit to Patan.

After photographing one of the inscriptions noted above, I explored as carefully as possible the western side of the town. Here, in a place called Purncaligāvāhār, I found a water-spout inscription bearing characters of the same period as those of the Mānadeva inscription noted above at p. 10. Both the dates however and the king's name are so far chipped away as to be, I fear, quite beyond recovery.

Not far from the same place I found a small tablet of slate dated N.S. 523 (A.D. 1403) and recording in Newari, mixed with Sanskrit, a religious donation "in the reign of the Yuvarāja Jayadharma-malla." In A.D. 1400 (Catal. Introd. p. ix. and table), we find from the colophon of our University Library MS. Add. 1664 a triple regency of Jayadharma with his two younger brothers: from this inscription it would seem that in 1403 Jayasthiti was still alive (as Jayadharma is called yuvārāja), but had abdicated at some time subsequent to A.D. 1392 in favour of his three sons; while subsequently the eldest superseded the other two in the regency. Finally in A.D. 1412 we find the second brother Jayajyoti¹ perhaps reigning alone. It is a curious illustration of the irregularity of the Nepalese chronicles that none of them, including that recently² commented on by Dr Bhagvānlāl Indrajī, make any mention of these three brothers, but agree in making Yakshamalla the son and immediate successor of Jayasthiti. Compare the revised table of kings of Nepal in Appendix III.

I proceeded next to photograph the picturesque tank known as Chāyavāhā. The Buddhist stūpa on the left bears inscriptions dated N.S. 577 and 579 (A.D. 1457—9).

The whole scene was selected as a favourable and characteristic specimen of the picturesqueness of the Nepalese town, showing as it does specimens of the tumular and pagoda styles of Nepalese religious architecture, and of the equally characteristic domestic work with carved wood fronts and overhanging eaves.

Nov. 27. On this day H. E. the Mahārāja kindly sent me a number of coins to examine. All with one exception were Nepalese silver of the XVIIth and XVIIIth centuries. I have noted a few dates and kings' names, not hitherto noticed, in my revised table of kings given below in Appendix III.

But the great event of this day was my visit to the Mahārāja's library. I did not, however, enter the room in which the books are usually kept, but the whole collection, consisting of many thousands of MSS., was brought for me from the palace to the Durbar-school building. So much trouble having been taken for my convenience, I made no enquiries as to the library room itself. Possibly the books are usually stored in one of those small rooms in which some of the best Indian collections of manuscripts (e.g. that in the splendid palace at Oodeypore) are even now kept and which contrast so curiously with European ideas of a commodious library. If this be the case, we must hope that educational progress¹, now, we trust, commencing in Nepal, will extend to the affording of still greater and more regular facilities for the study of the unique literature of the country preserved in this collection of MSS., in many respects, as we shall see, the finest in India.

Several pandits were assembled to assist me, among them Damaruvallabha Panta, known as a scholar beyond his native country and now teacher of Sanskrit in the pāṭhsālā. As to the obliging library-staff, I will only say that, however the books are kept, they are found with a quickness that many a European library cannot equal. As far as I know, I am the only European who has seen this collection, but some information as to its contents has on two occasions been placed in European hands.

One of these accounts is to be found in the lists sent to the University Library by Dr D. Wright, of which an abstract is given in my catalogue at p. 17: but I always understood that, so far from having seen the collection, he had doubts as to its existence; hence the remark there added, "It is impossible to say whether such a collection really exists," a statement which I am now glad to be able to reverse.

Another account is to be found in an official paper—like so many others, unknown to the few whom it might really benefit—kindly unearthed for my enlightenment by Mr A. Mackenzie, Home Secretary to the Government of India, at his office in Calcutta, during my subsequent visit to that place. It bears the somewhat strange title: "List of Sanskrit Works supposed by the Nepalese Pandits to be rare in the Nepalese Libraries at Khatmandoo." At the end occurs the subscription:

"R. Lawrence, Resident, Nepal Residency.

The 2nd of August, 1868."

¹ The very existence of the building in which I saw the books is a proof of this. Ten years ago (1875) Dr Wright wrote, "The subject of schools and colleges in Nepal may be treated as briefly as that of snakes in Ireland—there are none." Now we have at least one building in which both English and Sanskrit are taught, and, as I have every reason to believe, well taught.

That both this and Dr Wright's lists refer to the real collection seen by me, was proved by the classes of literature, which correspond exactly, in name and in number of books, with the rough but classified list of books which was first placed at my service at this visit to the library. There have been, however, very numerous accessions: nor can the rough list be anything like complete, for the MSS. in the library are counted not by hundreds merely, but by thousands.

I may add that I mentioned to H.E. the Mahārāja, a possible application for copies of works in the library, and found from the pandits in charge that the services of a copyist could be readily secured. I trust therefore that efforts will be made to obtain copies of some of the rare works which I now proceed to mention.

It would be of especial value to our library to obtain a copy of this fine MS., as we possess the only fragments of this grammar known to exist in Europe. My present acquisitions have all but completed the text, while we have several fragments of unidentified commentaries, which this MS. would put us in the way of assigning to their authors.

Bhāṣhāvṛitti, by Purushottama, with commentary called Bhāṣhāvṛittipañjikā by Viçvarūpa. Palm-leaf, Bengali writing.

I have remarked above, p. 13, on the rarity of the text. This commentary is, I believe, quite unknown.

I next give a list of plays, of which the first only appears in Lawrence's list:

1. Amṛitodaya nāṭaka.

2. Bhairavānanda, by Maṇika, produced under Rāja Jayasthiti (A.D. 1385—92). Compare our MS. Add. 1658 (Catal p. 159).
3. Malayagandhinī.
4. Vidyātīhaka.
5. Vimrālapana (i).
6. Çrikhaṇḍacaritra.

None of these plays have been met with in India. I had unfortunately no time to examine them and to find how many were, like No 2, local productions.

In Jyotiṣha (astronomy and astrology) I took notes of what seemed to me new, chiefly on behalf of Dr Thibaut of Benares, who is doing important work in this branch of literature. On my return to Benares I found that most of the works I had noted were unknown to him and to his accomplished astronomical pandit, Sudhākara Dube, of whom I shall speak later on. I may add that, though I can pretend to no special knowledge of the subject, so as to sift astronomical wheat from astrological chaff, I believe the works whose titles I subjoin to be of considerable rarity.

See Lawrence, p. 11, where also occur the titles of several other rare works. The collection having been formed, as I was told, by the late Sir Jung Bahādur, and thus probably collected by Hindu pandits, it was not to be expected that a large number of Buddhist works would be included; none indeed are mentioned in Lawrence's list; there is however a small number, and amongst them the following.

- 772 Abhisamayālaṅkāra, a commentary on the Prajñāpāramitā, by Haricandra, 158 leaves, with 7 lines on a page, in the characteristic hooked character. Doubtless the same as the commentary at Calcutta. See Rājendralāl Mitra's Nepalese Buddhist Literature, p. 194, line 12.

This is a most important work, and a copy should certainly be asked for.

- 1103 Lokācārasaṅgraha. A collection of ritual books with Newari translation : paper, about 50 leaves.
- 772(?) Bodhicaryāvatāra, followed by another work, 50 leaves, 12 × 2 inches, various Nepalese hands, XIII—XIVth cent.

My opportunity of examining this fine collection was only for the tantalising space of about four hours, for on the following day, when by this time I was just getting my arrangements for the acquisition of MSS. into good working order, I was obliged, owing to an intimation from the Resident given some days before, to leave the Government bungalow, which I had been occupying during my stay. The reason of this was an official visit from an officer of the Public Works Department. I regret extremely, on my own account and for those interested in my journey, that this circumstance should have put an abrupt end to my visit. Had I been fully aware of the conditions under which I resided in Nepal, I should have made negotiations (and these would have been, as I infer from subsequent experience, of a simple kind) for permission to occupy the tenement for a much longer time. As it was, I had no alternative but to leave the country¹.

¹ Mr Girdlestone had kindly arranged with the Durbar for a permit to visit two towns in the Tarai, both unknown to scientific travel; but the want of a pandit or native agent to accompany me decided me not to avail myself of this privilege. Should I be enabled to visit Nepal again, I have little doubt the pass could be renewed, and I should then make a point of securing the assistance of some person like my friend Pandit Bhagvānlāl. Is it too much to hope that the government of Nepal may some day see their way to do something in the cause of archæological research in their country, so rich in records of the past? We note with satisfaction that several of the more enlightened native states, like

I believe it will be seen from the foregoing pages that I found sufficient archæological work to keep me busily occupied during my brief stay. My collection of Buddhist and other MSS. acquired in Nepal more than realises my own expectations of the probable success of even a much longer stay.

The architectural studies which I had proposed to myself were almost entirely precluded by want of time. I had as a rule barely time to put down my notes of dates, etc., and on no occasion could I feel that time permitted the taking of measurements and accurate observation of details, to which Mr Fergusson refers in his work on Indian Architecture (p. 299 sqq.) as a great desideratum for the proper study of this interesting chapter of Oriental art-history.

After several days' uneventful journey I reached Calcutta, where my work was much helped by the friendly and scholarly kindness of Dr Hörnle and of Mr C. H. Tawney, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, to whom indeed, as already intimated in my preliminary Report, I am also indebted for help elsewhere in India.

Here no MSS. are to be had (so far as I know), except perhaps a few modern works from Orissa, of which I have brought one specimen. This is merely a Bhāgavata-purāṇa, which the owner, Mr L. J. K. Brace, Assistant Curator of the Botanical Gardens, desired me to present to the British Museum, in connection with certain botanical specimens of which I proceed to speak.

I visited the Botanic Garden of Calcutta—the most beautiful of the kind I ever saw—mainly to obtain dried specimens for the University Library of the various kinds of palm-leaf used for writing purposes, and these the same gentleman has kindly sent, and they are deposited in the library accordingly. I had never succeeded in obtaining very definite information on Jeypore, have engaged in such work: and it is clear from the events at the great Rival-pindi durbar this year that Nepal no longer desires to pursue a policy of entire isolation from the current of civilization in India generally. I need hardly add that I should always be most willing and ready to avail myself of any practicable opportunity of personally directing or in any way furthering any scheme towards this end.

this point from botanical friends at home, but Pandit Umeṣa-candra Ṣarma, the courteous librarian of the Sanskrit College, Calcutta, pointed out to me that many of the best MSS. were written, not on the leaf of the common talipot palm (tālapattra), (Borassus flabelliformis), but on the more finely grained leaf of the teret (Corypha taliera and C. elata).

In the Calcutta Museum, the archæological part of which has recently been admirably arranged and catalogued by the Curator, Dr Anderson, I took copies of many of the unpublished inscriptions; but I understand that they will shortly be dealt with by Mr J. F. Fleet in his forthcoming volume on Gupta inscriptions.

As to the specimen of a hitherto unnoticed character, coinciding with the writing of a unique MS. fragment brought by me from Nepal, I may refer to my notes in Part II. § 2 below (Cāndravyākaraṇa). These are given in anticipation of a fuller study of this character, which I propose to publish hereafter, since, as far as I can judge at present, this discovery seems to be among the most interesting of my journey.

In the library of the Asiatic Society I examined the colophon of the oldest of the MSS. sent from Nepal by Mr Hodgson. As mentioned in one of the reviews (Athenæum, Jan. 5, 1884) of the Society's recently published catalogue of this collection, entitled Nepalese Buddhist Literature, some misapprehension seemed to exist as to the date of this MS. The results of my reading are given in Appendix III., in my supplemental table of kings of Nepal, where the date and king's name well accord with chronological results already established.

I also took advantage of my stay in Calcutta to read some portions of Sanskrit philosophical works, the full meaning of which is rarely understood by European scholars unless they have had the advantage of instruction derived directly or indirectly from the traditional school of interpretation in India. In this matter and in many others I have to acknowledge the very kind help of Professor Maheṣacandra Nyāyaratna, Principal of the Government Sanskrit College. I was very glad to be able to call myself his praṇishya (pupil's pupil). Perhaps in this iron age the paramparā (spiritual succession) can be passed on even through and to mlecchas; at any rate the best of brahmans could not have received kinder attention than I from the Professor and his pupil and assistant lecturer, Raghunāth Cāstri.

To the same friend and to another of his pupils, Bābū Haraprasāda Vandyopādhyāya, I am indebted for a most interesting afternoon spent in visiting two native schools for Sanskrit. A similar visit had been made two years before by Professor J. Jolly of Würzburg, who records his experiences most graphically in the Deutsche Rundschau for 1884¹. The first of these schools is picturesquely situated on the Hooghly bank above Calcutta at Shamnagar. The building was given by the liberal Tagore (Thākur) family, and, in spite of the doubtless sanctifying influence of lingas and shrines, shows, I regret to say, distinctly European influence in style.

Within, however, all is Oriental: not a chair in the place, except some kindly kept (I presume) for the infirmity of European visitors: teachers on the cushions surrounded by knots of pupils. In the highest class—that of the Nyāya philosophy—I found pupils of ages from fourteen to forty, some coming from distant parts of India. At the instance of Prof. Maheçacandra they had a disputation, much like one of our old Cambridge “Wrangles”, in which was established, for my edification, after the rules of this philosophy, the existence of God.

To the next place, Bhātpāra, I was conducted by Bābū Haraprasāda, a collaborateur in Dr Rājendralāla Mitra’s Nepalese Buddhist Literature, and met there by Bābū Hrishikeça, both of them representatives of the few remaining old Bengali families who have for generations taken pride in endowing these simple seats of learning. It would be well, I think, for some disbelievers in Hindu disinterestedness, if they could see this body of venerable teachers, living in simple, dignified poverty, feeding as well as teaching their poorer pupils. How much in fact is known about such institutions by our Anglo-Indian friends, often so ready to generalize about the character of “the natives,” may be estimated from the circumstance, that, though the place is only a few miles from the metropolis, I was (so I heard) only the third European who had ever visited it.

After a Christmas most pleasantly spent with Mr G. A. Grierson, joint compiler with my last host at Calcutta, Dr Hörnle, of the great work of a scientific Bihāri dictionary, I passed on to Benares.

On ground so well-trodden it might scarcely have been expected that any fresh archæological discoveries would fall to my lot. Yet in a garden near the Raj Ghat I found a fragment of 10 lines in a character not later than the XIth century. As the stone was presented to me, I shall be able, when I have had leisure to examine it more carefully, to offer this, my single specimen of an original and not a mere copy of an inscription, to one of our University Museums.

The chief results of this second visit to Benares are to be found in my list of MSS. in Part II.

I also made some enquiries as to the Jain community of Benares. Owing to the kind introduction of the Raja Çiva-prasāda C.S.I., himself a member of an old Jain family, I obtained access to the printing-press, and also to the library, connected with the Mandir, or Jain temple. The Maṇḍalācārya kindly had a transcript made, for my use, of his list of MSS., adding a promise to allow copies to be taken. This transcript I give in Appendix II., merely transliterating it and correcting a few obvious slips, but without attempting to verify the exact form of each title.

This library, not previously, I believe, visited by any European, may prove critically important to editors of Jain texts, as Jain MSS. are, as a rule, obtained from Western India. Though the community is of the Çvetāmbar sect, the library contains Digambar works also, e.g. the Kathākoṣa¹, of which I negotiated for a copy. This arrived in England shortly after I did.

¹ As there appear to be several collections of Jain tales with this general title, I may explain that the work referred to is that commencing with the story of Dhanada. Two tales from it have been printed by Prof. Nilamaṇi Nyāyālaṅkāra in his Sāhityāparicaya from the Calcutta Sanskrit College MS., on which document the editor has, in more senses than one, 'left his mark.'

At the invitation of my friend Pandit Dhundhirāja Dharm-ādhikārī I attended a committee meeting of the new library started by the pandits of Benares, chiefly, I understand, at the suggestion of the pandit just named, in memory of the distinguished scholar Bāla Ćāstrī, and called Bāla Sarasvatī-bhavana. The great feature of this library is that it is a place of deposit for MSS. on loan, not necessarily for good and all. If the very numerous owners of MSS in the city can be induced only to deposit their books there, many of the characteristic risks incidental to their preservation in Indian houses will be avoided, and many rare books will doubtless come to light. At the same time, pandits are encouraged to bequeath works to the institution.

At the meeting¹ that I attended a scheme was also started for making search as to the contents of the private libraries of the city. It is indeed satisfactory, when one hears of difficulties placed in the way of the various Government officers in their search for MSS., to find here a body of native scholars willing not only to make known their own treasures, but to assist voluntarily and unofficially in the great work of literary search. One practical advantage of the institution to European scholars is, that it affords an opportunity of getting accurately made copies of almost any of the numerous works used by the pandits of Benares. Editors of philosophical texts especially may thus at once encourage a good institution and get an accurate copy by applying here.

As to the Government College Library, its present condition under Dr Thibaut and Pandit Sudhākar seems most flourishing. MSS. are constantly added, as far as the limited funds allowed by Government permit. It is however extremely unsatisfactory and discreditable to Benares to find that many of the works registered in Dr F. Hall's Bibliographical Index as belonging to this library 27 years ago are not now forthcoming.

A circumstance of this kind, occurring in the metropolis of ¹ I subsequently found an account of this meeting given in the Kavivacana-sudhā, a Hindi journal of Benares for January 19th, 1885. My remarks on the occasion occupy a very unmeritedly large space, I fear, in the report.

Hindu learning and religion, ought to be borne in mind by all impartial persons in considering remarks like those of Dr Peterson at the end of his first Report on Sanskrit MSS. (1882—3, p. 72), directed against the sending of Sanskrit MSS. to Europe¹.

I had little time to spend in examination of the MSS. of the library, but amongst the philosophical books I noted the following as supplying information supplementary to that given by Hall.

(1) Two palm-leaf copies of the Nyāyalilāvati-prakāṣa, written in Upper Bengal in the years of the Lakshmaṇa era 389 and 395 (A.D. 1496 and 1501) respectively.

(2) The Nyāyavācaspati, a work of which I have not found any mention in Hall, or in any other work of reference, unless it be, as Prof. Cowell has suggested to me, the Nyāyavārttika-tātparya-ṭikā (Hall, 21). Palm-leaf, Ṣaka 1531 (A.D. 1609).

(3) Kaṇādarahasya, an old copy acquired since Dr Hall's time.

(4) Praṣastapadavācya (? 'bhāshya), Ṣaka 1530 (A.D. 1608).

I trust that before long we may get a good catalogue of this important library, so that the world may be enlightened as to ¹ Dr Peterson will, I know, pardon me for adding a few words in self-defence as a collector for European libraries.

It seems to me that, without appealing to any national prejudices, which are out of place in questions of scholarship, a book is best kept wherever it is most safely and, in all senses, liberally kept.

As for the safety of MSS., every collector has his tale to tell of fine books packed away in roofs of houses, etc., and preyed on by damp and insects or other vermin. At all events the white ant has not yet been imported into our libraries.

As for liberality in arrangement and description, let me point out that, in spite of their advantages in respect of learned and helpful pandits, scholars in India, excepting Dr Rajendralāl Mitra and the late Dr Burnell, have given us nothing worthy of the name of a Catalogue.

Lastly as to liberality in lending, some Indian readers might well suppose in reading the above-cited passage that "sending to Europe" meant never coming back. Yet I am glad to be able to say that, while yet in India, I was the means of a well-known native Sanskritist's applying for and receiving a very ancient and valuable Sanskrit MS. from an English library.

the gains under the present excellent régime, as well as the losses since the appearance of Dr Hall's notes, which form so excellent a basis for the philosophical portion of such a compilation.

Besides much assistance generously rendered by Pandit Dhundhirāja, I received help in various ways from Dr Thibaut and Mr Venis of the Government College; also from Pandit Vindhyaçvariprasāda, whose knowledge of bibliography is exceptionally wide; and from Pandits Lakshmīnārāyaṇa Kavi and Sudhākara Dube. The last named, who is the present librarian of the college, presented me with copies of several of his astronomical and mathematical works, written in Sanskrit. I am unfortunately not able to give an opinion on the scientific value of these, but I have deposited them in the University Library in the hope that they may be noticed, as I am informed by Dr Thibaut that Pandit Sudhākara is a mathematician of considerable originality, and that his researches deserve far more recognition than they have received, owing to his want of command of literary English. Dr Thibaut adds that he is willing to translate into English original papers by this pandit for reading before any suitable scientific society in Europe.

After some memorable days spent in Agra and its neighbourhood, I passed on to Jeypore.

Here I visited the very interesting library of H. H. the Mahārāja several times, permission—quite exceptional I believe in the absence of the prince—being most kindly granted me to visit it as often as I required. Some particulars as to this fine collection are to be found in Dr Peterson's first Report (1882—83). Much information will doubtless soon be at the disposal of scholars, as the work of cataloguing the collection is proceeding under the skilled hands of Lakshmīnātha Çāstri of Benares, assisted by Kṛishṇa Çāstri. Both of these pandits gave the most cordial help in my work at the library, and have been, I may add, in friendly communication with me since my return. In anticipation, I give a few notes on works that seem to be unique or otherwise remarkable. Under the subdivision of Rāmānuja philosophy, a school not much represented in libraries owing to its peculiar views as to the promulgation of its tenets; I found the following works.

marks.

1. Vedārthasaṅgraha by Rāmānuja, a MS. of 37 leaves; rare, but known to Hall, and quite recently printed at Madras in the Telugu character.
2. A commentary on the preceding called Vedārthasaṅgraha-tatparyā-dīpikā by Sudarçana Sūri, who is known as a commentator on Rāmānuja's Çribhāshya. The present commentary has, I believe, not been hitherto met with.
3. Tattvamuktākalāpa by Venkaṭācārya, sometimes called Venkaṭanātha. Can this be the work cited in the Sarvadarçana-saṅgraha (see Cowell and Gough's translation, p. 86, note) ?

In Jyotisha I noted :

- Jyotish 4. Rājamarīgāṇikā by Bhojadeva, a personage to whom 45.3 several works in various branches of literature are attributed. This copy was made in Çaka 1450 (A. D. 1528) by Jyotirvid Çrīdatta son of Saṅka (?) अत्र-पठनार्थं

In dramatic literature I noted a couple of local productions :

- Kāvya 5. Janakīrāghava-nāṭaka, attributed to the Yuvarāj
36.15 Rāmasiṃha, son of Jayasiṃha, who was reigning about A.D. 1625. MS. written A.D. 1664.
- Kāvya 6. Prabhāvalī, a play in four acts, composed by Hari-37.13 jīvana Miçra at the command of the said Rāmasiṃha when rāja.

I may also mention :

- 37.8 7. Hāsāmṛita, a farce composed by Viṭṭhalakṛishṇa Vidyāvāgiça at the command of Sujanasīṃha, described as reigning in Bandelkhand ; 16 leaves.
8. Pārthaparūkrama, a vyāyoga in about 500 *çloka*s, by a yuvarāj called Prahlāda. This is followed by the beginning of a play called
9. Dūtāṅgada by Rāmachandra.

I noted next two pandits' plays, written on the model of the Prabodhacandrodaya, and intended to illustrate philosophy :

- Kāvya 10. Svanubhūti-nāṭaka by Ananta Paṇḍita son of Tryam-37.5 baka. Various schools are discussed. 63 leaves.
- 37.1 11. Kṛṣṇabhakticandrikā by Anantadeva, author of the Smṛitikaustubha, who flourished at the beginning of the xviiith cent.
12. Ghṛitakuljā, a farce in about 250 ślokas. MS dated
V. S. 1731 (A.D. 1674).

The above with the exception of No. 11 (as to which see Bühler, Cat. MSS. in Gujarat II. 116) are, I believe, unknown.

I noted also two copies of the

- 37.6 13. Lāṭakamelana by Caṅkhaḍhara, a farce apparently 59.2 satirising the Digambara Jains, who however speak ordinary dramatic Prakṛit. Dr Bühler (Cat. Guj. II.
122), and also Dr Peterson in his second Report (for 1883—4) note copies of this.

I visited of course, as all travellers do, the ruined city of Amber, the former capital of the state. At a place so much in the track of visitors I scarcely expected to find anything of fresh archæological interest, but it is a characteristic proof of the amount of quite elementary work still remaining to be done in Indian Archæology, that, in a small, though not ruined, Temple of the Sun overlooking the town I found a short inscription bearing a date nearly half a century earlier than anything hitherto known in connexion with the place. See Appendix I.

I will add here a suggestion made by my kind host Dr T. M.
Hendley, who was my guide on this occasion, that the fine
'Jagatsohana' temple in this ruined town might give many most useful hints to the architects of Christian churches in India.
Indeed not only the main buildings, but the whole precincts present a strong and curious analogy to an ecclesiastico-collegiate establishment.

According to my custom of visiting schools where Sanskrit is still taught on the traditional plan, I went to H. H. the Mahārāja's Sanskrit Pāṭhshālā, where I was kindly received and shown round by Pandits Rāmbhaja and Civarām. Everything, as far as one can judge, seems progressing favourably on the old lines.

During my stay at Jeypore, I had the pleasure of many interviews with Pandit Durgāprasāda, whose knowledge and appreciation of literature are most exceptionally wide.

I next spent a day or two at Ajmere, where I copied the large XIIth century Sanskrit inscription carefully preserved in the famous Arhāi-din-ka Jhopra. Strangely enough, it seems to be still unpublished.

Hence I passed on to Nimbahera, whence Col. Walter, Resident at Oodeypore, had kindly arranged a ḍālā for me to Oodeypore.

In this city, in situation the most beautiful¹ perhaps in India, I spent a short time, without however achieving any of the success in the matter of MSS. gained by Dr Peterson some years before. I attribute this to my want of an agent. Dr Peterson had sent on his native assistants previously, and they no doubt materially prepared the way for him. Should I visit India again, I should make a point of securing the services of some pandit to assist me in this way.

In archæology, however, I found at Oodeypore many matters of interest; and here I was most materially helped by Bābū Ćyāmal Dās, Kavirāj (court poet or herald) to H. H. the Mahārāṇa. My courteous host Col. Walter had kindly informed him of my approaching visit and its purposes, and the Kavirāj lost no time in extending to me the right hand of fellowship.

I proceed to give a short account of the literary work, a very important one in my opinion, on which the Kavirāj is engaged. The chief families of Rajputana have usually employed a herald or family bard, who has in some sort chronicled their deeds. Bābū Ćyāmal Dās has made a most fitting use of his position as royal herald in causing these to be collected and having digests made of their contents. From these, and from the general chronicles and royal vaṃṣāvalis, which are extant for the state of Oodeypore (or Meywar), the

Kavirāj is compiling a history of this state. I was much surprised to find in his library a very fine collection of books in all the chief European languages, bearing on the history and topography of Rajputana. Bearing in mind, however, how much history and panegyric run into one another in Eastern literature, it is most important to find that, supplementing his work, is a systematically collected series of inscriptions, which exist in such numbers in these parts. The growing interest (though still it is surprisingly small) felt by native scholars in their own ancient monuments and the records they bear, is one of the encouraging sides of the influence of Western thought in India, though one must confess that Europeans may still do much to make up for the influences, so deteriorating in many ways, which they and their civilization have brought to bear on native morality and native art.

But to resume. By the direction of my kind friend I was guided to several spots interesting both for architecture and inscriptions. My guide was Pandit Rāmpratāp, who has worked specially for the inscription section of the forthcoming history. The pandit is in the employment of the Durbar, and his services both here and later at Chittor were kindly placed at my disposal by H. H. the Maharāja, with whom I had more than one interview, at which he manifested a most friendly interest in the objects of my visit.

I visited of course the celebrated royal cemetery, the Mahāsati, as to which Mr Fergusson¹ remarks: "All [the tombs] are crowned by domes and all make more or less pretensions to architectural beauty; while as they are grouped together as accident dictated and interspersed with noble trees, it would be difficult to point to a more beautiful cemetery anywhere." Possibly the place has been somewhat neglected since Mr Fergusson wrote; at present the beautiful and varied effect of the architecture is seriously marred by the weeds and undergrowth, and by the want of suitable paths. Outside the precincts of the cemetery proper I was shewn by the pandit several smaller tombs, which he told me were those of ministers of the state. Several of these are evidently of considerable age and merit attention.

Not far from this is the village of Ar or Ahar, abounding in objects of archæological interest, which have never been properly described. There are several Jain temples, not all of them at present in use. In one I noted an interesting series of shrines built round the square lower end of a temple courtyard. These were later additions and in almost every case bore the name of the donor and date of erection, the dates being mostly of the XIVth century. Some of the images contained in them, however, if not the buildings themselves, were of earlier date. I noted one fine undraped figure of a Tirthamkara or Jain 'apostle' bearing date [Vikrama] Samvat 1031 (A. D. 974). Just outside one corner of the temple wall and on a lower level, so as to be partially excavated, were cells in which the monks formerly resided. Many of these have short inscriptions in Prākṛit, and bear dates chiefly of the XVIth century of the Vikrama era.

Besides the Jain temples we find in Ar traces of forms of cult a little removed from the ordinary run of Hindu temple worship. In a temple close by that just described I noted a shrine of a Nāga or serpent, which I think is of somewhat rare occurrence in modern India. The image was four or five feet high and was erected in the XVIIth century.

The next record is that of sun-worship, comparatively rare, as already observed, and little studied or scientifically understood in India. I found here no temple of the sun, as at Amber (p. 29), but a fragment of an inscription, from which it would appear that in the reign of Çaktikumāra (X—XIth cent.) the previously existing practice of offering each year 14 drammas (द्राम्या) of some oblation to the sun was formally confirmed. This inscription may serve as another instance of the large amount of archæological work still to be done in India. I discovered it on a piece of marble built into some steps leading to the terrace where stands the Jain temple just described. Here it had escaped the notice of my excellent guide Pandit Rāmpratāp, though he was evidently familiar with these little visited temples and their inscriptions.

The Pandit has sent me quite recently, too late indeed for me to publish it, as he kindly desired, in the present work, a beautifully executed squeeze and transcript of another inscription discovered by him since my visit in the same locality and containing mention of the same king.

The fine Sanskrit library of the palace, where I was most kindly received by my friend the Kaviṛāj and a number of pandits assembled in my honour, calls for no description from me, as Dr Peterson's "Detailed Report for 1882—83," an extra number of the Bombay Asiatic Society's Journal, is in the hands of all scholars. In the library catalogue, which will, I trust, during the present reign be amplified and ultimately printed, I noted a small work of a few lines only on a strange subdivision of Īlpa-ṇāstra, the construction of beds, certainly very late, as the (xvth century) Vāstu-maṇḍana is quoted. It seemed to me of some interest to find an addition to this division of literature (constructive art), always so thinly represented in Indian libraries, composed at so late a date in the classical language, and a copy was kindly presented to me, which I keep as a souvenir of my visit and also to help in affording material for studies in this little-studied branch of literature, which I hope to prosecute when I have leisure.

I was now permitted to visit the ruins of the ancient city-fortress of Chittor in the same state, the scene and often the very centre of Rājput and Musulman warfare for so many centuries. Here again I profited by the excellent guidance of Pandit Rāmpratāp, who had spent three months on the spot copying the very numerous inscriptions bearing on Rājput history, and doubtless also searching for fresh ones under the piles of ruins on every side.

I observed with regret that the tree noticed by Major H. H. Cole in his first Report on Ancient Monuments (p. clxxxii), as growing on the top of the older of the towers of Victory, was still unremoved. Not far from the famous tower of Khumbo Rāṇa, and above the tank called by Major Cole the gau mukh, is a cave, which has apparently been used as a Jain 3.
In it are several Prākṛit inscriptions, in charactto be of about the XIVth century. I have copies of several, and should they turn out interesting I shall publish them before long. To have made a detailed study of them just now would, with the unfortunately very limited amount of daylight leisure at my command, have delayed the present publication too long.

My stay in Chittor was limited to a part of a day, and I could not but feel with some regret what a field for historical, archæological and artistic discovery I was leaving in the state of Meywar, both here and nearer the capital. It is certainly strange that more work of this kind has not been done hereabouts. The Government of India, which has of late manifested practical interest in archæological research, certainly seems hitherto to have been rarely successful in gaining the services of officers at once qualified to criticize the artistic and constructive details of ancient buildings and to interpret and digest the documentary evidence, both literary and monumental, connected with them.

Passing hence to Indore, I endeavoured, in this instance without success, to prosecute my work of collecting MSS. A short visit to the ancient city of Ujjain, or rather to the very modern representative of the old city, proved also unavailing. So far from finding traces of the ancient astronomical learning for which the town was once renowned, I found the pandits scarcely conversant, it would seem, even with the names of the chief works on the subject.

As my allotted time of absence was now drawing to a close, I returned to Bombay, where I met by appointment Pandit Bhagvân Dās, who has long been the energetic agent of the Bombay Government for the collection of Sanskrit MSS. By a minute of this Government the agent is allowed to sell duplicates of works in the Government collections for the use of certain institutions in this country, of which our University Library is one. A rough list of the fine collection that I purchased from him is given in Part II. § 1.

I left Bombay for Europe on March 1st.

Thus terminated a tour which, if it has not resulted in any literary or archæological discoveries of first-rate importance,—such as can only be reasonably looked for in the work of travellers of greater experience and leisure,—may nevertheless, I believe, be held to have justified the grounds of my application to the University in respect of the Worts Fund.

There now only remains to me the pleasing duty of acknowledging the sympathy and assistance I have received from various quarters. In referring first, as becomes me in the present work, to the liberality of the University, as manifested in the grant from the fund just named, I wish particularly to testify to the great encouragement I received not only from the benefaction itself, but from the generous conditions under which it was bestowed. The only condition in fact was the preparation of a Report,—a provision which the present work is designed to fulfil; and in view of the friendly and unsparing way in which the Syndics of our University Press have met my wishes as to its publication, I may say that this very condition has been turned into an additional privilege.

I venture thus to call attention to the circumstances under which I worked for the University, not because I would imply that to those acquainted with the history of the English Universities such treatment will seem at all exceptional, but because I feel bound to bear witness, which many fellow-workers can confirm, to the great stimulus to exertion afforded by such frank confidence, unhampered by the cramping restrictions by which scholarship amongst us, when encouraged at all, is too often hindered.

My project of travelling so many thousands of miles, and buying everything of literary value to me on my way, which seemed a somewhat ambitious one, was also encouraged and furthered by the very kind and timely assistance of two friends, Professor Cowell and the Reverend A. J. Harvey, M.A., of St. James's, Paddington.

Owing to the great kindness and hospitality of the residents in almost every part of India that I visited, my journey unexpectedly attended with so little expense that occasion to avail myself of the funds lent by these the purchase of MSS., but my obligation, and indirectly I may perhaps add, that of the University, is none the less.

The names of many friends and fellow-scholars in India, who so kindly entertained and in every way assisted me, will have been met with in the foregoing pages; nor would it have been so necessary to dwell on their kindness but for the recent publication of the rather crude 'ideas' of an English traveller, which I found had produced a most unpleasant effect upon the various societies that had done their best to receive him cordially; and, I must add, doubtless did an amount of mischief among the natives that the writer could perhaps hardly realize¹.

¹ I say mischief: for, although the paper (since separately published under the title 'Ideas about India') contains many true and forcible remarks (or, it may be, random shots that occasionally hit the mark), and this may be very salutary reading for some Anglo-Indians, or even for Englishmen at home, if other more thorough books be read in connexion, yet to native readers the whole tone will be most misleading.

As to the passage in Mr W. Scawen Blunt's first paper (Fortnightly Review, Vol. xxxvi., p. 175), alluded to in the text, on the luxury of Anglo-Indians, which has given more offence perhaps than any other, if it be appropriate that one cold-weather tourist should rebuke another, I would remind Mr Blunt that it is, to say the least, not always cool in India, and that things that may rank as luxuries here become necessities of healthy life there. Many of Mr Blunt's most extraordinary statements seem to me simple cases of hasty generalization, which even my own limited observation serves entirely to correct. So far from having found that "no Collector's wife will wear an article of Indian manufacture, to save her soul from perdition" ('Ideas,' p. 29), I got from several kind hostesses many valuable details about Indian clothes and ornaments, which I found that they not only wore themselves but also sent home to their friends in Europe. So far from Englishwomen looking on "the land of their exile as a house of bondage," I have generally found ladies at home preserving the kindest recollections of their Indian life, not excluding the relations with their native servants and dependents. For these, be it observed, are the only natives with whom, as a rule, our countrywomen can have much to do, not so much owing to prejudices on their side (though these often doubtless exist), but rather to the barbarous and un-Aryan practice forced upon the Hindus (properly so called) by the ancestors of Mr Blunt's Muhammadan friends. In fact, in those parts of India where Muhammadan rule chiefly prevailed, very few of even the best natives have been at all educated up to the ideal of the society of ladies, and for this reason, which seems to have escaped Mr Blunt's notice, free social intercourse is out of the question. As a contrast alike to the real average native of a region such as Upper Bengal, and to Mr Blunt's supposed typical Anglo-Indian lady (ibid. p. 47), it is a pleasure to me to be able to cite the testimony of an English

But I hope that European residents in India will understand that scholars at least, who start with no preconceived social or political 'ideas' to be proved, can accept the ungrudgingly rendered assistance of their fellow-subjects of every race, without turning it to a root of bitterness and unmerited reproach.

The great kindness shown to me by native scholars has, I trust, been made evident by what I have said in this Report. It was indeed most encouraging to find what a bond of union is formed by enthusiasm for a common study between races sometimes supposed to be almost by nature unblending or even antagonistic. I had not, indeed, expected to find any hostility to my work on the part of the pandits, but in the place of the shy reserve, which even some European scholars accustomed to work like mine had led me to expect, I was often quite surprised at the cordiality and frankness with which both Hindus and Jains came forward to help me. Nor did my native friends and helpers proffer their assistance simply while I was present to ask it, κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλίαν ὡς ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι; on the contrary, I have received since my return MSS., books and copies of inscriptions from several places that I visited, and scarcely a mail has arrived without bringing me letters from my Indian friends.

To each and all of them, who may chance to read these pages, I can only say, in recording my thanks, that I trust we may meet again before very long, whether some of them may be induced to visit Europe during 1886 from the double attraction of specially Indian celebrations in London and Vienna, or whether I may be permitted to utilise the knowledge and experience I have been gaining by again visiting India.

With such a hope let me conclude. As I have stated in my lady, the wife of a well-known scholar, who has travelled in many parts of Western India amongst the manly Rājputs and the Mahrattas, that she has never met with anything but courtesy from native gentlemen, and that in entertaining, as she often does, the younger members especially of the various higher castes and nationalities (for, pace some popular writers and talkers, there is no such thing as 'the Indian people'), she considers their manners even superior to those of the corresponding age and class in Europe.

preliminary Report¹, the results described in the foregoing pages need only be regarded, so far as the University is concerned, as a beginning: and for myself I feel that the time and energy which circumstances may leave at my disposal for scholarly work cannot be better employed than in working out at home the material for research thus obtained, in the hope of some day supplementing it by fresh work in the same distant yet pleasant fields.

¹ See the Cambridge University Reporter for May 26, 1885, p. 736. Whether used much by myself or by other Sanskritists at Cambridge, I will hope that students in other places will avail themselves of my collection. For (if I may be allowed to repeat an observation made in the preface to my Catalogue of our Buddhist MSS.) the tendency of recent so-called reform has been practically to discourage the prolonged residence in the University of those of its members whose special literary pursuits cannot at once be utilised for the conduct of the ordinary round of its studies; and I fear that it will be some time before Prākṛit is studied at our universities in the same way as the Greek and Italian dialects, and perhaps still longer before we may hope for what is already found in some foreign universities, the systematic comparative study of religion and philosophy.

PART II.

LISTS OF MSS., WITH NOTES.

I NOW proceed to give an account of what formed the chief object of my journey, the search for MSS.

I therefore give (§ 1) lists of the MSS. collected by myself and of those collected by Pandit Bhagvān Dās and bought together from him, as mentioned above (p. 34).

Of my own MSS, about 212 in number, I have made a classified list. For the Pandit's collection of nearly 300 MSS., I have contented myself with transliterating the very rough list drawn up by or for him. I have corrected a few obvious slips, but I have not had time to verify all names or add dates of writing etc. from the MSS. themselves.

All these, with the exception of a few marked with an asterisk, are now placed at the disposal of the University on terms explained in a Report addressed to the Library Syndicate.

Notes are given (§ 2) on some of the chief MSS. in my own collection. I could have wished, as I have already intimated in the preface, that these could have been fuller and more comprehensive. But I trust that the MSS. may be properly catalogued, along with the valuable collection of Jain MSS. acquired by the University some years ago.

I also give (§ 3) notes on MSS in India, copies of which might advantageously be negotiated for.

§ 2. NOTES ON PARTICULAR MSS. ACQUIRED.

(1) FROM NEPAL.

I regret that I have little of fresh interest in Buddhist literature. There will be found however several fresh MSS. of works already known, as well as several non-Buddhistic works of some importance.

Cāndra-vyākaraṇa.
Several new fragments. A partial exception may be noted in the case of the Cāndra-vyākaraṇa or grammar of the Cāndra school of grammarians, attributed to Candragomin, a Buddhist author. Of the text and its commentaries our library already possesses several portions, which are duly noted in the Catalogue.

I have now secured several new fragments of this work.

The first of these (List, XI, 4) has the great interest of being written in a character unknown to me and, I may say, unknown in India also, for I showed the MS. or a specimen of the character to all the chief authorities in such matters, both European and native, in Northern India.

In the Calcutta Museum however I observed a figure of Buddha on a pedestal inscribed with characters somewhat more difficult to decipher than those of my MS. (indeed I learned from the Curator that the inscription never had been read), but still bearing the same distinguishing feature: namely, a triangular ornament at the top of each vertical stroke in the letters. The form of letter with thick tops tapering down into a quasi-triangular form is well known, but here we get the apex of the triangle uppermost. Besides this there are many very curious archaisms in the letters themselves.

I have obtained a photograph of the figure above-mentioned, and with the help of this and of my squeezes and rubblings I hope to be able to publish a complete story of this character before long.

Parāśara-gṛāma-sūtra. These texts seem to be new to Nepal. There seems to be little if consequence in this literature even in the great Dacca library. The owner of the present MS. evidently had no idea of what it was, as he described the book in a list that he sent to me simply as 'choḍā-wīḥ' "little one."

Mahābhārata—Sāhitya-sūtra. This MS. is remarkable as being by far the latest Nepalese manuscript I have met with. The colophon records that it was written "for the library" so that the book might be read to King Tuganarāja Mahā, by the Bengali Brahman Haribha in Nepal, saṃvat 513 (A.D. 1693)."

Hitopadeśa and Mudrārāksasa. These books were written saṃvat by the same scribe at an interval of three years, NS 423—6 (A.D. 1873—6). It is I think of some importance for the history of the Hitopadeśa, which has usually been regarded as a somewhat late redaction of the great collection of the Pañca-tantra, to find that in the middle of the XVIIth century it had already gained enough celebrity to be copied in the valley of Nepal.

I also acquired a large MS. which was stated by its owner to be the Bhīma-vinoda. Unfortunately, the book is imperfect at both ends, and I can find no clue to its name in any chapter-title; nor could I get any assistance in recognising the work from various pandits to whom I showed it in other parts of India. Part of an index remains. This begins with the treatment of special diseases (jarātisāra 'fever and dysentery' fol. 66 of original MS.) and ends with various general modes of treatment (dhūmapāna — karāḍa — nasyādi "smoke-inhaling, rinsing, sternutatories" ff. 523—531).

I obtained another copy of the Tantrākhyāna, a work already in the Wright collection. It is a collection of tales, of which many, but not all, occur in the Pañca-tantra and Hitopadeśa. The work deserves investigation in connexion with the studies in Indian folk-lore now in progress in several quarters. It consists of 43 short stories, chiefly in verse. The first is of the tortoise and the two geese ; the second, the prince and the ape.

In the same covers, and written by the same scribe 'Jasa'-varmā, is a quasi-dramatic piece on the Ekādaśī-vrata or the vow of the eleventh day, composed (fol. 4, a 4) for king Jayaratna Malla.

Tripura-sundarī of Vidyānanda-nātha.

The Tripurasundarā-paddhati or Jñānadīpavimarśinī is an unknown Sivaic ritual-book by an unknown author, Vidyānandanātha or 'nāthadeva, described as Mahāpadmavana-shaṇḍa-vihārī. A full alphabet is given on f. 74 b.

Anony-
work.

Another work is remarkable as being by far the smallest palmleaf MS. yet found in Nepal, as it measures only $5 \times 1\frac{1}{2}$ inches. It has no title and I have not succeeded in identifying it. It is divided into 28 adhyāyas, and commences with a dialogue between Īiva and Parvatī.

Nārada.

I now give some extracts from a very full description kindly supplied to me by Professor Jolly of Würzburg of a fragment obtained by me in Nepal, which has turned out to be a new recension of the Nārada-smṛiti. My discovery of this MS. has been most opportune, as he is at present printing a critical edition of the text as a fitting sequel to his valuable translation of this dharma-çāstra.

The first
the MS.

"The Nepalese MS. of the Nārada-smṛiti is very valuable indeed, both on account of its marked divergence from all the other MSS. of that work, that have come to light hitherto, and on account of its age. It is dated, at the end, N. S. 527, whereas none of the other MSS. is more than a hundred years old. The first portion of the Nepalese Nārada has apparently been lost and supplanted by fragments of two different works in the Nepalese language, the first of which extends from fol. 1 to fol. 24a, and is written in a very clear hand. It is described at the end as a Nepalese commentary on a Nyāyaçāstra (iti nīnāmakṛitanyāyaçāstranēpālabhāṣātīpini samāptaḥ), and dated 527, like the fragment of Nārada. Fol. 24 b and fol. 27 (25 and 26 are missing), seem to contain fragments of another Nepalese composition. They are very badly written. The Nārada. fragment of the Nārada-smṛiti, accompanied by a commentary in Nerari, is written in yet another hand, and begins at fol. 28 a with the words: ṛittir eṣhā dāreshu guruput্রে তথাইবা ca ||, which correspond to the latter portion of paragr. 8, V. Head of Dispute, in the Indian MSS., and in my English translation of the Institutes of Nārada. The following leaves, up to fol. 93, agree in the main with the Indian recension, as contained in my translation and in the edition which I am printing, from seven Indian MSS., in the Bibliotheca Indica."

[Prof. Jolly here subjoins a most valuable list of various readings, which I omit as being beyond the scope of the present work, and also because I trust his edition will shortly appear.]

"It will be seen from the list of various readings that the Nepalese MS. is a valuable check on the Indian MSS. of Nārada. In many cases, the superior correctness of its readings admits of direct proof through the numerous quotations from the Nārada-smṛiti, which are scattered through the Mitāksharā, Vīramitrodaya, and other Commentaries and Digests of Law. It is true that in a number of other cases the quotations speak in favour of the readings preserved in the Indian recension of Nārada. The Nepalese MS. is also by no means free from serious blunders.

Character of the above-mentioned readings.

"The last Viśādapada, called Prakīrpaka, does not however constitute the final chapter of the Nepalese, as it does of the Indian, Nārada. It is followed, first, at fol. 93 b, by a long chapter on Theft or Caurapratishedha, as it is called in the colophon (nārada-proktūyām caurapratishedham nūma prakaraṇam samāptam). The opening śloka of this chapter agree very closely with Manu IX. 256—260. The remainder has its counterpart both in Manu IX. 252—293, and in the eighth chapter of the Code of Manu, where the subject of Theft is treated at considerable length (VIII. 301—343). It may seem strange that an additional chapter on Theft should thus be introduced at the close of the whole work, after all the eighteen Viśādapadas have been discussed in their order. Precisely the same want of consistency is, however, observable in Manu's treatment of forensic law, a chapter on Theft and kindred matters being tacked on, at the close of the section on forensic law, in the Code of Manu as well as in the present text. This fact goes far to prove the genuineness of the chapter on Theft in the Nepalese MS. It is also important, because it gives fresh support to the truth of the traditional statements, which connect the composition of the Nārada-smṛiti with the Code of Manu. Indian tradition is wrong, it is true, in making the Nārada-smṛiti an early recension of the Code of Manu. The chapter on Theft, as well as the entire previous portion of the book, is full of detailed rules and provisions, which are decidedly less archaic than the corresponding rules of Manu. It consists of no less than 61 ślokas and one trishtubh. Moreover, it contains a reference to a coin called dīnāra, which corresponds to the Latin *denarius*¹. Some texts from this chapter are expressly attributed to Nārada in the Viramitrodaya.

The final chapter on Ordeals.

"It is more difficult to account for the addition, at fol. 106 b of the Nepalese MS., of a final chapter on Ordeals, which subject is usually treated in the law of evidence.

The end.

"At fol. 118 a the whole work closes as follows: idam alpādhiyāṃ nṛṇāṃ durvijñeyāṃ yathoditam | nārādīyaṃ yad astiha nyāyaśāstram mahārthavat || tasyeyaṃ likhyate ṭikā spashtā nepālabbhāshayā | imāṃ vijñāya bhūpādyaś carantu nyāyavartmanā || ° || iti mānave nyāyaśāstre nārada-proktāyāṃ saṃhitāyāṃ nyāyadharmapadāni samāptāni || ॐ || saṃvat 527 kārṭtikamāse, etc. The last clause, which contains the date, is written in different hand from the remainder of the work, and very indistinctly. The colophon, in accordance with some of the previous colophons, describes the work of Nārada as a recension of the Code of Manu. This tends to confirm the Indian tradition, above referred to, regarding the connexion of Manu with Nārada. See, too, my Tagore Law Lectures, pp. 46 and 57. It is curious that the Code of Manu is called a Nyāyaśāstra in the last colophon. The term nyāya in this compound is no doubt an equivalent for dharma, as is not seldom the case in the law-books, e.g. Nārada xvii. 3. The same use of the term recurs in the two *śloka*s just quoted, in which the author of the Nepalese Commentary declares that he has written it for the enlightenment of kings and others, as the Nārada-smṛiti is difficult for the ignorant to understand."

(2) GENERAL COLLECTION (Benares, Rajputana, etc.).
Kāvya (Poetry, etc.).

Though six commentaries on the Meghadūta are made known to us by Aufrecht (Bodl. Catal. p. 125), I have acquired two copies of the text with commentaries hitherto, as far as I know, unnoticed. Two Commentaries on the
duta*.

The MSS give the text in somewhat different forms, as the first has 122 distichs and the second 113, while the Oxford copy above cited has 116. Two of the spurious verses noted by Aufrecht (अनन्दीत्यं and आश्वसिनां, here given as आश्वसिदं,) occur in the first MS. as vv. 71 and 118 respectively. The commentary to this MS, called Vidvadbālānurañjinī, was written at Benares by Sarasvatī-tīrtha, called in the commentary itself 'Yati' and in the colophon 'Paramahansa Parivrajakācārya.'

In the second MS the name of the commentator is not given in the colophon. He thus refers to himself and his work in verses 2 and 3:

कालिदासवचः कुत्र व्याख्यातारी वयं क च ।

तदिदं मन्ददीपेन राजवैष्णवप्रकाशनं ॥

तथापि क्रियतेऽस्माभिर्मैघदूतस्य पंचका ।

उन्नताग्रयमाहात्म्यस्वरूपव्यातिलालसैः ॥

This MS. is written in the fine bold form of Nāgari for which the scribes of Kashmir are celebrated. An antique Kashmirian form of घ may be noted in leaf 1 line 4, in the third of the lines just quoted. Several other good examples of this writing, besides one instance¹ of the old Kashmirian or Çaradā, may be found in the present collection. In the Jeypore royal library I found one Kashmirian copyist at work.

durghata.

À propos of commentaries on the Kāvyas I may call attention in passing (though this is included in the collection of MSS. from Bombay [No. 216] which I am not able at present to describe) to a collection of short adversaria on the Māgha-kāvya called Māgha-durghata, by one Rājagrūḍa.

Sāraṅga-
tattva.

Sāraṅgasāratattva. This is a collection of 200 verses on polity or general morality. In spite of the strange form of the title it would seem to be compiled from the Çārṅgadharapaddhati. The last clause runs: माकन्दादिव मञ्जरी घनभरावर्षेवया निर्गता सेयं शार्ङ्गधरात्तनोतु जगतां चेतोमुदं पद्भितिः । Though obtained at Benares, the MS. was written for the Maharāṇa Jayasimha, who reigned at Oodeypore A.D. 1680—99.

Nala-campū, comm.

In the special form of poetical composition called campū, I obtained a MS. of a ṭippaṇa or commentary on the Damayantikathā or Nala-campū by two Jains, Candapāla and Guṇavinaya Gaṇi, with a paṭṭāvalī of these commentators.

Nāṭaka (Drama).

Under this head I have a portion of a play, the Çrīṅgāra-vāṭikā, or 'love-garden,' produced for Viṣṇusimha, Kumāra of the Mahārāja Rāmasimha, doubtless the sovereign of Jeypore, whom we noticed above (p. 28), as a patron of the drama. Of the 29 remaining leaves (for the leaf numbered 30, placed with the rest, does not belong to this MS.), 10 are occupied with the prologue, from which we learn (f. 5 a) that the story tells of Candraketu son of Vijayaketu, king of Avantī, who left his kingdom to the care of his minister Buddhisāgara and travelled to Campāvatī. The first scene discovers him with his companion, the Vidūshaka; his adventures are described in the garden of Kāntimatī daughter of Ratnapāla, king of that city (f. 15 a—b).

Alaṅkāra (Rhetoric and ars poetica).

Under this head we have a copy of the Vāgbhaṭālaṅkāra Vāgbhaṭa with comm. with an anonymous commentary not previously, I think, noticed. In it we find Vāgbhaṭa called by a Prakritized form of name, Bāhaḍa or Bāhaḍadeva. The subscription of Chapter IV. runs: इति बाहडमंत्रीयविरचितवाग्मटालंकारे चतुर्थः परिच्छेदः and in the final subscription the author is styled मंत्री वाग्मट; so that we may perhaps infer that he was the minister of the king Jayasimha (cf. Aufrecht, Bodleian Catalogue, 214 a), under whom the work was composed. The commentator identifies this king with the son of Karpadeva cited by Aufrecht.

The MS., which is a good specimen of Jain calligraphy, was written in V.S. 1524 (A.D. 1467) during the pontificate of Lakṣmīsāgara of the Tapāgaccha, who attained his sūripada in V.S. 1508 (see Klatt in Ind. Ant. xi. 256).

I have also obtained a copy of the Alaṅkāratilaka (cf. Alaṅkāra tilaka. Bühler, Cat. MSS. Gujarat, III 44). A second title of the book is Kāvyaṇuṣāsana. This is likewise the work of a Vāgbhaṭa, who from the introduction is clearly a Jain and in the postscript is described as famed for 'the composition of several new works' (नयानेक महाप्रबन्धरचना). He may thus be fairly identified with the author of the Vāgbhaṭālaṅkāra; but being also described as the son of Nemikumāra, he must be separated¹ from the medical Vāgbhaṭa, who was the son of Siṃhagupta and named after his grandfather Vāgbhaṭa².

A third work among my few, but on the whole interesting, Rasa-mañ-jarī with comm. specimens of Alaṅkāra-literature is Bhānudatta's Rasamañjarī with a commentary called Rasikarañjanī by Gopāla Bhaṭṭa, son of Harivaṃṣa Bhaṭṭa. This MS. supports the reading विदेहभूः, noticed by Professor Rāmkrishṇa Bhāṇḍārkar (Report on Sk.

¹ In spite of the tradition referred to by Burnell, Cat. Tanjore, 57 b.

² See the verse quoted from the physician's own writings by Anna Moreçvara Kunte in the preface (p. 6) to his edition of the Aśtāṅgahṛdaya, which may be taken in modification of Prof. Aufrecht's statement that Vāgbhaṭa's parentage is 'subscriptionibus tantum librorum traditum' (Cat. Holl. p. 303, not.).

MSS. 1882—3) as giving the right indication of the author's birth-place.

Darṣana (Philosophy).

Various Vedantic works.

Praṇṇālī, by Jadubharata, pupil of Mādhavānanda; a catechism of Vedantic doctrine.

Svarūpanirṇaya a Vedantic work on the nature of ātman by Sadānanda, clearly the same as that mentioned by Hall (Index, p. 129) though this copy has about 2000 *śloka*s as compared with 800 in Hall's. My MS. has four chapters (pariccheda), the last being entitled jīvanmuktibhūmikānirūpaṇa.

Svātmanirūpaṇa by Ṣaṅkarācārya. The commentary by Saccidānanda Sarasvatī, which is mentioned without any special name by Hall (p. 104), is given, and styled Āryā-vyākhyā.

Grutisāra, by Totakācārya, said to have been a pupil of Ṣaṅkara. The only other known copy of this work seems to be a MS. at Tanjore (Burnell, p. 95 a). The work consists of 160 *śloka*s; and our MS. has a commentary by Saccidānanda Yogi, 'Yogīndra-ṣiṣya,' of which I have found no trace elsewhere.

The Samjñāprakriyā is a short compendium of Vedantic terminology which may prove useful to the lexicographer as well as to the student of philosophy. I have not found mention of the work in any catalogue of MSS.

The Gītātātparyabodhinī is a Vedantic commentary on the Bhagavadgītā by Ānandasarasvatī, an author of whom nothing appears to be known. The present MS. contains adhyāyas I. II. VII. VIII. and part of IX.

Jain works.

Sambodhi-pañcāsikā. This is a tract of 50 verses in Prakrit on saṃsāra, the dharma and other teachings of Jainism, in the form of instruction given to a pupil by the author, Gotamā Svāmī. Each verse is accompanied by a paraphrase in Sanskrit.

It would be interesting to know why we find in the text the month, in the commentary the month and day, but in neither the year, when the book was composed.

Dharmasaṅgraha. This is a work in verse on various religious topics by Medhāvī, who describes himself as Ācārya-jinacandrānta-vāsī. In Ch. I. verse II we find a reference to त्रीजिनमेकः..कर्त्ता महापुराणस्य. After some verses on cosmogony the chapter concludes with a legend of king Çreṇika, its title being 'Çreṇikānandavarṇana.' At f. 11 are some descriptions of the architecture and decorations of shrines.

The Pramāṇanirṇaya is a discussion of the various kinds of pramāṇa, or sources of knowledge, after the manner of the ordinary philosophical works. The chief divisions of the work are on lakshana, pratyaksha, and anumāna (fol. 31 a). In the chapter which appears (for the MS. is unfortunately incomplete) to be the last, we find an inquiry into the authority of the āgamas which form to the Jain philosopher çabda or the 'Word.' The text is written in a fine bold hand and is accompanied by brief marginal glosses containing references to Jain literature, e.g. the Vītarūgakathā (f. 31 a), and to Buddhist teaching (ff. 28 b, 31 a).

Lumpāka-mata-kuṭṭana is the subscription of a short work (of 21 leaves). Outside is written in a much later hand 'Lokāyata-kuṭṭana.' The Lumpāka mata was a school founded in Vikr. Saṃvat 1508 (A.D. 1461). See Dr Klatt in Ind. Antiq. XI. 256 (September 1882). The treatise is in the main a compilation from the Siddhānta or canon of the Çvetāmbaras and begins: नवा श्रुतज्ञानमनंतमेदं । पारंगतं चेतसि सन्निधाय । सिद्धान्त-वाक्यानि करोमि सम्यक् । Its compilers belonged to the Kharatara-gaccha and wrote the work in Saṃvat 1687.

Another work of similar dimensions and date is the Upadeśarasāla by Sādhuraṅga pupil of Bhuvanāsoma, (also of the Kharatara-gaccha) composed in V. S. 1587 (A.D. 1530). The MS. was written in Saṃvat 1656 (A.D. 1599), during Jinacandra's pontificate. The subject is ethical, and the language Sanskrit with Prakrit citations.

On various subjects connected with religious ordinances and discipline we have a Vicāra-saṅgraha or Paramita-vicār-mṛita saṅgraha, being a collection of 25 vicāras (examinations?).

The title of the first is Jinapravacana-svarūpa-vicāra. The last relates to the ground-whisks and 'respirators' (मुखवस्त्रिकारजोहरण) to prevent the destruction of insect life, which I saw myself in actual use among Jain monks. The work is in Sanskrit, with numerous citations from the canonical, and other Prakrit, books.

Another work not previously noticed, I think, is the Vicārasāraprakaraṇa or Mārgaṇaṭaka, of 117 Prakrit verses, with a very full Sanskrit commentary, terminating with a paṭṭāvalī of the Kharatara-gaccha.

I also collected, wherever I could, Paṭṭāvalīs (lists of Jain pontiffs and teachers). The publication of several such lists by Dr Klatt in the Indian Antiquary for 1882 has proved most useful. I hope to publish those that I have collected, and trust that we may in time thus get material for a regular table of Jain chronology, which cannot fail to be of the greatest use for general Indian history.

In the extensive literature of Jain folk-lore a new acquisition is the Guṇavarmacaritra, a work in Sanskrit verse by Maṇikya-sundara Sūri of the Aṅcala-gaccha, the author of the Prithvī-candacarita, of which a MS. exists in the Berlin library. For purposes of identification, especially as the work has another title in the margin, Çatarabhedaka[thā?], I may mention that the opening of the tale relates how Guṇavarmā son of Naravarmā, king of Hastināpur, and Lilavatī his queen go to the svayaṃvara of Guṇāvalī daughter of the king of Campā (Bhagalpur). The moral of the tale is the duty of proper religious observance (pūjā).

Another large collection of tales is the Vratākathākoça or Vratopākhyāna-kathā composed by Çrutisāgara, Bhaṭṭāraka-Çrī-Mallībhūṣaṇa-bhaṭṭārakagurūpadeçāt. It consists of 24 stories in numbered Sanskrit verses, related in order to illustrate the merit of observing fasts and holy-days. Numerous parallels to this are to be found in the Buddhist literature of Nepal, as for example the tale in praise of the Asṭamī-vrata (Catal. pp. 15, 73). The first tale of the present series is called Jyeshṭha-jinakathā.

Similar to this collection is a tale in 150 verses of which the colophon runs : iti śrī-kārttike saubhāgyapañcamīmūhātmya-vishaye Varadatta-Guṇamañjarī-kathānakam.

The Jaya-tihuyāṇa (tribhuvana)-vr̥tti is a Prakrit hymn in 30 verses with ■ Sanskrit commentary and an introductory tale told in Sanskrit, of the sickness, nocturnal vision, cure and subsequent votive offering of Abhayadeva Sūri at Sthambana(-ka)-pur in Gujarat.

§ 3. NOTES ON MSS. IN PRIVATE POSSESSION, NOT ACQUIRED, OF WHICH COPIES COULD BE MADE FOR THE LIBRARY.

Besides the MSS. in the great libraries of Kathmandu and Jeypore, and those in the Government College Library at Benares, of which some account has been given in Part I., I noted a number of MSS. of which copies could be made for the Library, or actually had been made. Indeed it was my constant endeavour to induce owners of books to show me all the good MSS. they possessed, whether they were willing to part with them in every case or not.

In Nepal I was offered a copy of the Bhadrakalpāvadāna. As I had not sufficient data to show whether this was not a copy made by the owner previous to the sale of an original to Dr D. Wright (Add. 1411, Catalogue, p. 88), I declined to purchase it. But I am not sure whether the MS. might not be worth purchasing, even with this risk, owing to its rarity and interest.

At Benares I examined the following MSS., of which the owner would willingly send copies, made at the rate of 2 to 3 rupees (3 to 5 shillings) per thousand ślokas (of 32 syllables). As a specimen of the style of writing to be expected from Benares scribes, the wellwritten MS. of the Khaṇḍanoddhāra-ṭīkā in my collection (see under Darṣana, p. 44), obtained from the same Pandit, may be noted. The MSS. in question are chiefly old copies of philosophical works. Following the example of Dr F. Hall in his Bibliographical Index, I mention the date in every case where I observed it, as it may be of value in fixing the age of the commentary-literature, much of which is of course of recent, and indeed contemporary, origin.

(1) A commentary by Čaukara Miçra on the Khaṇḍana-khaṇḍa-khāḍya, a work which, like the Sarvadarçanasamgraha, reviews the different schools of Indian philosophy. Commentaries on this work appear to be very rare. The only mention I can find of it is in the Index of Hall, who had heard of it but had not seen it.

The remaining works are chiefly of the Nyāya and Vaiçeṣika schools.

(2) Nyāyavārttika. A portion of this work will shortly be printed by Pandit Vindhyeçvariprasād at Benares. A copy of this MS. is ready.

(3) Part of Vācaspati Miçra's Nyāyavārttika-tātparya, the Pramāṇa-lakṣhaṇa, about a quarter of the whole. Dated Lakṣhmaṇa Samvrat 417 (A.D. 1523).

(4) Nyāyakandali. Copied from a MS. dated Samv. 54 of Kashmir. This work appears to be unknown.

(5) Guṇaparakāçavivṛiti by Bhagīratha. Dated (in words) Çaka 1521 (A.D. 1599).

Amongst MSS. in private possession I may mention two that I noted in one of the lists of books in the Bala Samvrat Library (see above p. 25) during the very short time I was there, because the MSS. here, as stated above, are not in all cases given to the Library, though copies can be had.

(6) A commentary on the Caranavārtika

(7) A digvijai on the śūtri of the Harāmālika further, no doubt, might here and there be got out of my present materials. But, as I have said already, the pressure of other work and want of leisure by daylight renders it undesirable to delay publication.

I. Slab of stone, 18 inches wide, at Golmāḍhi-ṭol, Bhātgaon. Dated [Gupta-] samvat 316 or 318 (A.D. 635-7).

For further particulars see above p. 13 and add a reference to the article on Nepalese chronology in the Indian Antiquary for Dec. 1885 (p. 342), where Mr Fleet notes that this inscription 'supplies the keynote' to the interpretation of the early series. As to the units' figure which at p. 13 I have given as 8 I am somewhat uncertain. The symbol, which seems to me to be a numeral-figure and not an akshara or letter-numeral like the others, resembles most nearly the 6 in our most archaic Nepalese MS., Add. 1702 (see the table in my Catalogue), though there also 8 is very similar.

Therefore this boon must not be infringed by our dependants who have cognisance of this, nor by any other parties whatsoever: and whosoever, in contravention of this order, does so infringe or cause infringement, him I will in no wise suffer; moreover such kings as shall be after us, ought, as guardians of religion and (thus) as followers of grants (made...), to preserve my order in its entirety. ² The five great offences generally enumerated by writers on law and called by them mahāpātakas are: (1) murder of a Brahman, (2) theft, (3) adultery with a guru's wife, (4) drinking spirituous liquors, (5) intercourse with such as commit these offences. See Manu xi. 55, Vishṇu xxxv. 1-2, Yajñavalkya iii. 227. Dr D. Wright, on the authority (as he informs me) of Pandit Guṇanand only, gives a different list at p. 189 of his History.

My authority herein must not be infringed [etc., as in other inscriptions of Aṃṇuvarman]. Saṃvat 34, on the second day of the light half of the first (intercalary) Pausa. My appointed agent herein is Vindusvāmin, chief Minister of War."

The most important point in this inscription is the intercalation occurring in the date. My surmise that an intercalation was referred to in the expression prathama was first confirmed by Mr Fleet, to whom I showed my reading, but Professor Bühler of Vienna, to whom I am indebted for much help in deciphering this and the following inscription, called my attention to its great importance. Dr Bühler also kindly submitted the date to the examination of Dr Schram, Privatdocent für chronologische Astronomie at the Vienna University, from whom I have received through Dr Bühler some very elaborate and valuable calculations. I think it would be beyond the scope of the present publication to reproduce these here, but my obligation is none the less. Professor Adams has also most kindly worked out the calculations. From these two eminent authorities I have obtained the following results: (1) that the Nepalese at the time of the inscription used as the basis of their calendar not the Sūrya-siddhānta (in which Pausa is never intercalary, it would seem), but a work that had the same elements as the Brahma-siddhānta; (2) that the year 640 A.D. according to this rule is intercalary, which adds another confirmation, if any be needed, to the theory that the era of this group of inscriptions is that of Çrī-Harsha (A.D. 606).

Vajrapāṇi are Buddhist divinities; and as the raja is very rarely Sivaic, while Vaishnavism is very little known in Nepal, it seems fair to infer that we find here early traces of the curious juxtaposition of Hindu and Buddhist cult that the Tantric system brought into Nepal.

² The exact force of mātra is not easy to express. It cannot well have its common meaning 'merely'; if it does not convey anything of its radical meaning of measure, as suggested above, it probably serves only to give slight additional definition or emphasis to adhikāra.

³ I could not discern any remains of the k on the stone but s (conjunct) and nd were fairly distinct; and, though not clear in the squeeze from which the autotype has been prepared, in another squeeze made by me the n conjunct comes out very well and the s and d very fairly. Observe that the d is written below in the conjunct न्द in Gupta writing. The (akṣhara) form of 80 is also much clearer in this squeeze. I am not sure whether the unit-figure is 2 or 3.

What jaladroṇa may mean precisely I. have no means of telling; and the dictionaries give no help. I at first thought from the position of the stone and from a possible connexion with √dru ‘run’ that it must mean water-course, like praṇālī: but the ordinary meaning of drona, ‘tub’, rather suggests a reservoir; and to this view Dr Bühler, I find, is inclined. The word drona occurs also in the next inscription, and there the first meaning is perhaps more probable. The gradual approximation to Kuṭila forms in the characters of this inscription is noticeable, particularly in the lengthened and more sweeping curves of medial ā and ī.

This inscription is reproduced only on account of its date and style of writing. One might well suppose it to have been scratched on the stone by a second-rate MS. copyist, for both the incision and the attempt at Sanskrit are unusually feeble for an inscription of such a date; so much so that I have not attempted a translation. It records the gift of a water-channel (pannālī of course for pranālī) and a droṇa (see last inscription).

The great interest of the discovery is that we find here an instance, unique as far as I know, of the use of the peculiar local hooked hand of Nepal which has been abundantly illustrated in the Palæographical Society's Oriental Series as well as in my Catalogue.

This and the preceding inscription thus form a link, in point of character, between the periods illustrated by Nos. 1—15 and that of Nos. 16, 17, etc. in Pandit Bhagvānlāl's series.

Translation (see also abstract at p. 12).

Hail! In the year of Nepal 512, on the 6th lunar day of the dark half of Vaiçākha.

By order of Government. In the Çravaṇa asterism and the Aindra conjunction, Sunday.

In the capital city Lalita-pattana, presided over by the snake-king who is glorious with the rays of the gems of his cluster of seven hoods, the sovereignty being enjoyed by Jayasthiti the sovereign lord, who has gained favour from the bounty of Māneçvarī, whose royal lineage...[is renowned]...in various panegyrics as of the Asuras and Nārāyaṇa, who is adorned by [?mighty] deeds. In the northern region of Mānigala¹, there is the great tīrth called Kumbhatīrtha, where lives this venerable God Kumbheçvara². On the south-east side are Gaṇeça and Vāçukī, on the south all the divine Mothers, the tīrth of the Fathers is to the north, in the north-west quarter are Gaurī and Pushkariṇī in the north-east likewise Viṣṇu, and in the centre Kumbheçvara. With Agastya the sage born in the kumbha (pitcher) at the head...penance is done: by him Mahādeva is worshipped, and hence called Kumbheçvara, and with the water of the lake whoso makes ablution at the full moon of Çrāvaṇa, even he can obtain heaven.

Cleansed by the lotus of his feet and void of spot, stain or evil, from the mouthpiece of a conduit the water flows perpetually.

With the water from this tīrth if a man has strictly washed, and regularly drunk the water well meted out and has performed the rinsing of the mouth, or whoso daily and constantly salutes Kumbheçvara, he enjoys all pleasures and goes at last to the city and town of Çiva. At that place was Çiva destitute of a temple thereupon: Çiva Kumbheçvara abode under the mere shelter of a dwelling-house. [For the contents of lines 16—23 see p. 12].

¹ I omit the previous sentence as being partly obliterated and partly containing names and allusions, probably local, of which I have no knowledge.

² As to this form of Çiva we may compare the Asṭamivṛata-vidhāna translated by Wilson (Essays, ed. Rost, ii. 32), from which it will be seen that the cult referred to here is of the Tantric school.

(Line 23.) He has also made a variegated cover [for the treasury or treasure-case] approaching the mighty Lord, making thereon an offering of a lac auspicious with sounds of [recitations from ?] the Veda: there too he has erected a golden pinnacle and banner. Through him, the doer of such a good work, may the people sprung from the four castes¹ attain great bliss and a mansion in the highest at the last! The man who makes a dwelling for Çiva and also Viṣṇu or some other deity, to him is allotted wood, stone and brick. Such men as set up [the image of a god], to them accrues blessing, day by day becoming riches: those men go to Çiva's city and delight in it for ever.

ROUGH LIST OF MSS. IN THE LIBRARY OF THE JAIN MANDIR AT RĀMGHĀT, BENARES.

The following list is transcribed into Roman characters from a copy kindly made for my use, as mentioned at p. 24 above. I give it in the form I received it, only correcting a few obvious mistakes and not attempting to reconstruct the names of the less known works. It will be noted that the collection includes several of the Brahmanical works, (such as the poems of Kālidāsa) often found in Jain libraries, as well as numerous tracts in the vernaculars, as to which I have little knowledge.

As the above tables are given by way of supplement to the results tabulated in the Historical Introduction to my Catalogue, I take this opportunity of offering a few remarks on some points touched on in the criticisms¹ that have appeared on that work, and likewise of calling attention to several passages in the work in general, to which my notice has been directed from these and from other sources.

And first as regards the Historical or, as I perhaps might have called it, the Chronological Introduction. Dr Oldenberg thinks that my remarks (Catalogue, p. vi sqq.) on the relation of the dates given in the MSS. to the native chronicles and to the dates given by Kirkpatrick are somewhat infelicitous, in that I had "evidently not at all, or only unconnectedly, made such researches as might have given clear insight into the origin and value of the earlier Nepalese tradition."

I am not at all sure that detailed criticism of the Vamçavali would have formed a legitimate part of a library catalogue, the object of which seems to me rather to provide material for research than to originate theories. Be this as it may, the necessity for the critical investigation of the period before 1000 A.D. was to a great extent rendered unnecessary by the promise, to which I referred at p. xli, of a sequel to the article by Drs Bhagvānāl and Bühler in the Indian Antiquary for August 1880. This has now appeared in the same journal for December 1884² and deals with the relation of the Vamçavali to the inscriptions down to the XIIIth century, the writers being pleased to consider my treatment of the period covered by the later group of inscriptions so "carefully worked out" as to render further notice unnecessary. This being so, I am still somewhat at a loss,—though I have, I hope, sufficiently pondered on Dr Oldenberg's criticisms,—to know what precisely are the available materials for the critical 'Untersuchungen' that he would have me institute.

² The present volume, Mr Ferry, has now published another paper on this subject in the number for December 1885, as noted at p. 72 above.

As for documentary material, I have made some use for the present publication of a manuscript of the Vaṃçāvalī, as already stated (page 16, note); but I find that its differences from the text translated by Dr Wright consist almost entirely in the omission of a few of the legendary and anecdotal passages of that work. Some differences, indeed, of assigned lengths of reign there are, and these have been registered in the columns of the Table of Kings (under "Gorkha histories"); but the tradition is clearly the same. As to its value I agree with Pandit Bhagvānlāl that "Dr Wright's data are on the whole trustworthy," and I think that the new matter I have now brought to light tends to give remarkable confirmation of these native records which are not to be so lightly set aside as some critics would have us believe. This applies also to a date (A.D. 1141) noted by me at Paris, in the Hodgson collection of the Bibliothèque Nationale, while passing the present work through the press. Though of little importance in itself, it is satisfactory to observe how well this date accords with the periods assigned by me from the Vaṃçāvalī for the adjacent reigns. See Table I.

Some difficulties, such as the date A.D. 1662, remarked on in the note to Table II., do no doubt occur even in comparatively recent times; yet on the other hand, as has been before pointed out, we find the tradition preserved, somewhat confusedly it is true, but still unmistakeably, of an interesting event like the establishment of the Çriharsha era¹.

In the present work I have occasionally (as at pp. 8—9) ventured on a historical conjecture or tentative correction of the Vaṃçāvalī, which may be taken for what it is worth till further historical material comes to hand.

What the particular origin (Herkunft) of the Nepalese Vaṃçāvalī may be, I have no means of knowing, and should be glad to learn anything to supplement the statements of Dr Wright and Pandit Bhagvānlāl on the subject.

Dr Windisch, in the course of a courteous and detailed notice, thinks my description of the Mahāvastu too lengthy, because I "knew that it would be edited by M. Sénart." I was indeed aware that he had begun it, but as to when it may be finished I have no information.

I am indebted to the same reviewer for corrections of my reading of the colophon of Add. 1643 (pp. 151—2).

As to the last two corrections, the former, sanāttanāmm (for p. 152, l. 5), I am afraid I do not fully understand. The latter, samvatsare for samvatso, is merely typographical and had appeared in the corrigenda of the catalogue, opposite page 1.

On page 178, l. 2, I must decline to accept Dr Windisch's prañāṣa for prañāla. The verses in question deal with the supply of water, and in a well-irrigated country like Nepal the prañāli or prañāla (conduit) plays an important part. The word occurs in various forms both in Dr Bhagvānlāl's inscriptions and in those now published.

My friend Pandit Durgāprasāda of Jeypore, who manifested an interest that quite surprised me in a literature new to him, was good enough to read through a considerable part of my catalogue and favoured me with several emendations, which I have found on comparing them with the originals at Cambridge to be quite correct.

I have to thank all my critics for the appreciative way in which they have treated my palæographic essay; and it is some satisfaction to note that Professor Bühler, in his Appendix to Professor Max Müller's and Bunyiu Nanjio's "Ancient Palm-leaves from Japan" has followed precisely the same lines with frequent references to our earliest MSS.

On merely palæographic grounds I confess I was not at all surprised to find doubts expressed, like those of Professor Beal in the Athenæum, July 4th, 1885, as to the very early date assigned to those palm-leaves. The fact is that, as was pointed out in the review of Professor Max Müller's publication in the same journal for October 4th, 1884, the balance of archaism in forms of letters is, even on Professor Bühler's showing, rather in favour of the Cambridge MS, e.g. in the form of च.

I now subjoin the list of corrections that I have been able to make from these and other sources.

THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES, with Notes and Introduction. By the Very Rev. E. H. PLUMPTRE, D.D.; Dean of Wells. Large Paper Edition. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.

"No one can say that the Old Testament is a dull or worn-out subject after reading this singularly attractive and also instructive commentary. Its wealth of literary and historical illustration surpasses anything to which we can point in English exegesis of the Old Testament; indeed, even Delitzsch, whose pride it is to leave no source of illustration unexplored, is far inferior on this head to Dr Plumtre."—Academy, Sept. 10, 1881.

Kemble, some forty years ago. Of the particular volume now before us, we can only say it is worthy of its two predecessors. We repeat that the service rendered to the study of Anglo-Saxon by this Synoptic collection cannot easily be overstated."—Contemporary Review.

"The Paragraph Psalter exhibits all the care, thought, and learning that those acquainted with the works of the Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge would expect to find, and there is not a clergyman or organist in England who should be without this Psalter as a work of reference."—Morning Post.

THE MISSING FRAGMENT OF THE LATIN TRANSLATION OF THE FOURTH BOOK OF EZRA, discovered, and edited with an Introduction and Notes, and a facsimile of the MS., by ROBERT L. BENSLEY, M.A., Reader in Hebrew, Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. Demy 4to. 10s.

"It has been said of this book that it has added a new chapter to the Bible, and, startling as the statement may at first sight appear, it is no exaggeration of the actual fact, if by the Bible we understand that of the larger size which contains the Apocrypha, and if the Second Book of Esdras can be fairly called a part of the Apocrypha."—Saturday Review.

GOSPEL DIFFICULTIES, or the Displaced Section of S. Luke. By the Rev. J. J. HALCOMBE, Rector of Balsham and Rural Dean of North Camps, formerly Reader and Librarian at the Charterhouse. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

"The 'Masskeeth Aboth' stands at the head of Hebrew non-canonical writings. It is of ancient date, claiming to contain the dicta of teachers who flourished from a.c. 200 to the same year of our era. The precise time of its compilation in its present form is, of course, in doubt. Mr Taylor's explanatory and illustrative commentary is very full and satisfactory."—Spectator.

"A careful and thorough edition which does credit to English scholarship, of a short treatise from the Mishna, containing a series of sentences or maxims ascribed mostly to Jewish teachers immediately preceding, or immediately following the Christian era."—Contemporary Review

PEARSON'S EXPOSITION OF THE CREED, edited by TEMPLE CHEVALLIER, B.D. late Fellow and Tutor of St Catharine's College, Cambridge. New Edition. Revised by R. SINKER, B.D., Librarian of Trinity College. Demy 8vo. 12s.

"A new edition of Bishop Pearson's famous work On the Creed has just been issued by the Cambridge University Press. It is the well-known edition of Temple Chevallier, thoroughly overhauled by the Rev. R. Sinker, of Trinity College. The whole text and notes have been most carefully examined and corrected, and special pains have been taken to verify the almost innumerable references. These have been more clearly and accurately given in very many places, and the citations themselves have been adapted to the best and newest texts of the several authors—texts which have undergone vast improvements within the last two centuries. The Indices have also been revised and enlarged..... Altogether this appears to be the most complete and convenient edition as yet published of a work which has long been recognised in all quarters as a standard one."—Guardian.

POEMS OF BEHA ED DIN ZOHEIR OF EGYPT. With a Metrical Translation, Notes and Introduction, by E. H. PALMER, M.A., Barrister-at-Law of the Middle Temple, late Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic, formerly Fellow of St John's College, Cambridge. 2 vols. Crown 4to.

Vol. I. The ARABIC TEXT. 10s. 6d.; cloth extra. 15s.

Vol. II. ENGLISH TRANSLATION. 10s. 6d.; cloth extra. 15s.

"We have no hesitation in saying that in both Prof. Palmer has made an addition to Oriental literature for which scholars should be grateful; and that, while his knowledge of Arabic is a sufficient guarantee for his mastery of the original, his English compositions are distinguished by versatility, command of language, rhythmical cadence, and, as we have remarked, by not unskilful imitations of the styles of several of our own favourite poets, living and dead."—Saturday Review.

"This sumptuous edition of the poems of Behā-ed-din Zoheir is a very welcome addition to the small series of Eastern poets accessible to readers who are not Orientalists."—Academy.

THE CHRONICLE OF JOSHUA THE STYLITE, composed in Syriac A.D. 507 with an English translation and notes, by W. WRIGHT, LL.D., Professor of Arabic. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

"Die lehrreiche kleine Chronik Josuas hat nach Assemani und Martin in Wright einen dritten Bearbeiter gefunden, der sich um die Emendation des Textes wie um die Erklärung der Realien wesentlich verdient gemacht hat . . . Ws. Josua-Ausgabe ist eine sehr dankenswerte Gabe und besonders empfehlenswert als ein Lehrmittel für den syrischen Unterricht; es erscheint auch gerade zur rechten Zeit, da die zweite Ausgabe von Roedigers syrischer Chrestomathie im Buchhandel vollständig vergriffen und diejenige von Kirsch-Bernstein nur noch in wenigen Exemplaren vorhanden ist."—Deutsche Literaturzeitung.

CATALOGUE OF THE BUDDHIST SANSKRIT MANUSCRIPTS in the University Library, Cambridge. Edited by C. BENDALL, M.A., Fellow of Gonville and Caius College. Demy 8vo. 12s.

"It is unnecessary to state how the compilation of the present catalogue came to be placed in Mr Bendall's hands: from the character of his work it is evident the selection was judicious, and we may fairly congratulate those concerned in it on the result. . . Mr Bendall has entitled himself to the thanks of all Oriental scholars, and we hope he may have before him a long course of successful labour in the field he has chosen."—Athenæum.

Part II. Oedipus Coloneus. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

"Of his explanatory and critical notes we can only speak with admiration. Thorough scholarship combines with taste, erudition, and boundless industry to make this first volume a pattern of editing. The work is made complete by a prose translation, upon pages alternating with the text, of which we may say

"We have no hesitation in saying that in both Prof. Palmer has made an addition to Oriental literature for which scholars should be grateful; and that, while his knowledge of Arabic is a sufficient guarantee for his mastery of the original, his English compositions are distinguished by versatility, command of language, rhythmical cadence, and, as we have

"Wherever exact science has found a follower Sir William Thomson's name is known as a leader and a master. For a space of 40 years each of his successive contributions to knowledge in the domain of experimental and mathematical physics has been recognized as marking a stage in the progress of the subject. But, unhappily for the mere learner, he is no writer of text-books. His eager fertility overflows into the nearest available journal. . . London: C. J. CLAY & SONS, Limited, 1, Abchurch Lane, E.C. 4.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF JUSTINIAN'S DIGEST. Containing an account of its composition and of the Jurists used or referred to therein, together with a full Commentary on one Title (de usufructu), by HENRY JOHN ROBY, M.A., formerly Prof. of Jurisprudence, University College, London. Demy 8vo. 18s.

"Not an obscurity, philological, historical, or legal, has been left unsifted. More informing aid still has been supplied to the student of the Digest at large by a preliminary account, covering nearly 300 pages, of the mode of composition of the Digest, and of the jurists whose decisions and arguments constitute its substance. Nowhere else can a clearer view be obtained of the personal succession by which the tradition of Roman legal science was sustained and developed. Roman law, almost more than Roman legions, was the backbone of the Roman commonwealth. Mr Roby, by his careful sketch of the sages of Roman law, from Sextus Papirius, under Tarquin the Proud, to the Byzantine Bar, has contributed to render the tenacity and durability of the most enduring polity the world has ever experienced somewhat more intelligible."—The Times.

New Edition by BRYAN WALKER. Crown 8vo. 16s.

"As scholars and as editors Messrs Abdy and Walker have done their work well . . . For one thing the editors deserve special commendation. They have presented Gaius to the reader with few notes and those merely by way of reference or necessary explanation. Thus the Roman jurist is allowed to speak for himself, and the reader feels that he is really studying Roman law in the original, and not a fanciful representation of it."—Athenæum.

THE INSTITUTES OF JUSTINIAN, translated with Notes by J. T. ABDY, LL.D., and BRYAN WALKER, M.A., LL.D. Crown 8vo. 16s.

"We welcome here a valuable contribution to the study of jurisprudence. The text of the Institutes is occasionally perplexing, even to practised scholars, whose knowledge of classical models does not always avail them in dealing with the technicalities of legal phraseology. Nor can the ordinary dictionaries be expected to furnish all the help that is wanted. This translation will then be of great use. To the ordinary student, whose attention is distracted from the subject-matter by the difficulty of struggling through the language in which it is contained, it will be almost indispensable."—Spectator.

TRAVELS IN NORTHERN ARABIA IN 1876 AND 1877. BY CHARLES M. DOUGHTY, of Gonville and Caius College. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo. [In the Press.]

HISTORY OF NEPĀL, translated by MUNSHĪ SHEW SHUNKER SINGH and PANDIT SHRĪ GUNĀNAND; edited with an Introductory Sketch of the Country and People by Dr D. WRIGHT, late Residency Surgeon at Kāthmāndū, and with facsimiles of native drawings, and portraits of Sir JUNG BĀHĀDUR, the KING OF NEPĀL, &c. Super-royal 8vo. Now reduced to 10s. 6d. (published at 21s.)

"The Cambridge University Press have done well in publishing this work. Such translations are valuable not only to the historian but also to the ethnologist;... Dr Wright's Introduction is based on personal inquiry and observation, is written intelligently and candidly, and adds much to the value of the volume"—Nature.

A JOURNAL OF LITERARY AND ARCHÆOLOGICAL RESEARCH IN NEPAL AND NORTHERN INDIA, during the Winter of 1884-5. By CECIL BENDALL, M.A., Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge; Professor of Sanskrit in University College, London. Demy 8vo.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE ROYAL INJUNCTIONS OF 1535, by J. B. MULLINGER, M.A., Lecturer on History and Librarian to St John's College. Part I. Demy 8vo. (734 pp.), 12s.

Part II. From the Royal Injunctions of 1535 to the Accession of Charles the First. Demy 8vo. 18s.

"That Mr Mullinger's work should admit of being regarded as a continuous narrative, in which character it has no predecessors worth mentioning, is one of the many advantages it possesses over annalistic compilations, even so valuable as Cooper's, as well as over Athenae."—Prof. A. W. Ward in the Academy.

"Mr Mullinger's narrative omits nothing which is required by the fullest interpretation of his subject. He shews in the statutes of the Colleges; the internal organization of the University, its connection with national problems, its studies, its social life, and the activity of its leading members. All this he combines in a form which is eminently readable."—PROF. CREIGHTON in Cont. Review.

"Mr Mullinger has succeeded perfectly in presenting the earnest and thoughtful student with a thorough and trustworthy history."—Guardian.

"The entire work is a model of accurate and industrious scholarship. The same qualities that distinguished the earlier volume are again visible, and the whole is still conspicuous for minuteness and fidelity of workmanship and breadth and toleration of view."—Notes and Queries.

"Mr Mullinger displays an admirable thoroughness in his work. Nothing could be more exhaustive and conscientious than his method: and his style...is picturesque and elevated."—Times.

HISTORY OF THE COLLEGE OF ST JOHN THE EVANGELIST, by THOMAS BAKER, B.D., Ejected Fellow. Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A. Two Vols. Demy 8vo. 24s.

"To antiquaries the book will be a source of almost inexhaustible amusement, by historians it will be found a work of considerable service on questions respecting our social progress in past times; and the care and thoroughness with which Mr Mayor has discharged his editorial functions are creditable to his learning and industry."—Athenæum.

"The work displays very wide reading, and it will be of great use to members of the college and of the university, and, perhaps, of still greater use to students of English history, ecclesiastical, political, social, literary and academical, who have hitherto had to be content with 'Dyer.'"—Academy.

SCHOLAE ACADEMICAE: some Account of the Studies at the English Universities in the Eighteenth Century. By CHRISTOPHER WORDSWORTH, M.A., Fellow of Peterhouse. Demy 8vo. Now reduced to 10s. 6d. (originally published at 15s.)

"Mr Wordsworth has collected a great quantity of minute and curious information about the working of Cambridge institutions in the last century, with an occasional comparison of the corresponding state of things at Oxford. . . . To a great extent it is purely a book of reference, and as such it will be of permanent value for the historical knowledge of English education and learning."—Saturday Review.

"Of the whole volume it may be said that it is a genuine service rendered to the study of University history, and that the habits of thought of any writer educated at either seat of learning in the last century will, in many cases, be far better understood after a consideration of the materials here collected."—Academy.

P. OVIDII NASONIS FASTORUM LIBER VI. With a Plan of Rome and Notes by A. SIDGWICK, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. 1s. 6d.

"Mr Sidgwick's editing of the Sixth Book of Ovid's Fasti furnishes a careful and serviceable volume for average students. It eschews 'construes' which supersede the use of the dictionary, but gives full explanation of grammatical usages and historical and mythical allusions, besides illustrating peculiarities of style, true and false derivations, and the more remarkable variations of the text."—Saturday Review.

"It is eminently good and useful. . . . The Introduction is singularly clear on the astronomy of Ovid, which is properly shown to be ignorant and confused; there is an excellent little map of Rome, giving just the places mentioned in the text and no more; the notes are evidently written by a practical schoolmaster."—The Academy.

"Messrs Masson and Prôthero have, to judge from the first part of their work, performed with much discretion and care the task of editing Voltaire's Siècle de Louis XIV for the 'Pitt Press Series.' Besides the usual kind of notes, the editors have in this case, influenced by Voltaire's 'summary way of treating much of the history,' given a good deal of historical information, in which they have, we think, done well. SIR THOMAS MORE'S UTOPIA. With Notes by the Rev. J. RAWSON LUMBY, D.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity; late Fellow of St Catharine's College. 3s. 6d.

"To Dr Lumby we must give praise unqualified and unstinted. He has done his work admirably. . . . Every student of history, every politician, every social reformer, every one interested in literary curiosities, every lover of English should buy and carefully read Dr Lumby's edition of the 'Utopia.' We are afraid to say more lest we should be thought extravagant, and our recommendation accordingly lose part of its force."—The Teacher.

"It was originally written in Latin and does not find a place on ordinary bookshelves. A very great boon has therefore been conferred on the general English reader by the managers of the Pitt Press Series, in the issue of a convenient little volume of More's Utopia not in the original Latin, but in the quaint English Translation thereof made by Raphe Robynson, which adds a linguistic interest to the intrinsic merit of the work. . . . All this has been edited in a most complete and scholarly fashion by Dr J. R. Lumby, the Norrisian Professor of Divinity, whose name alone is a sufficient warrant for its accuracy. It is a real addition to the modern stock of classical English literature."—Guardian.
